Examination of apoptosis in hematopoietic cells can be performed using different techniques, such as in situ end-labeling of the DNA cleavage, staining of the surface receptors, analysis of the receptor density using flow cytometry. In our study apoptosis was analyzed in cord blood samples from normal newborn babies with flow cytometry. For each subject the samples were obtained from the cord vein on the first day and from the peripheral blood of the newborn baby. The analysis was performed on the day of birth and in the peripheral blood of the newborn one, three, seven and 14 days after birth. We detected a significantly lower percentage of apoptotic cells in the cord blood compared to the peripheral blood of newborns on day one and three after birth. The flow cytometry of the whole blood allows not only to determine the total number of apoptotic cells, but also helps to identify which cells undergo apoptosis.

A Team The Austin Cares Program is a community service program of the Austin Neighborhoods Foundation, a 501c(3) nonprofit that provides extensive support to Austin-area neighborhoods and communities. Our program is in its sixth year, and has grown to offer youth service opportunities every summer. We also work with our many local partners to offer a variety of community and nonprofit service opportunities. This year, we reached over 1700 young people and are thrilled to offer the following summer programs, and many more in 2013! The majority of our youth volunteers are paired with a paid mentor in order
