NEW Conservation Partners in Mongolia!

Patagonia Fly Fishing Ambassador and Wild Salmon Center Board Member, April Vokey, helps with science in Mongolia alongside MRO guide Jangar "Jack" Bataakhuu.

Wild Salmon Center (www.wildsalmoncenter.org) is an organization familiar to most anglers. They are a global leader in salmonid conservation, whose efforts have helped secure a vast network of strongholds protecting over 3 million acres of habitat and conserving many world class fisheries in North America and the Russian Far East.

We are ecstatic that Wild Salmon Center has now joined our team of highly effective NGO conservation partners, including BioRegions International, World Wildlife Fund-Mongolia, and The Nature Conservancy.

Now we will be better able than ever to advance taimen conservation through science-based efforts that engage communities and fortify Mongolia's taimen strongholds.

Please click on the link below to learn more from Wild Salmon Center's Director of Science and National Geographic Explorer, Dr. Matt Sloat, as he discusses his recent experiences in Mongolia and the exciting places our collaborative efforts may lead:

This is a great new step for Mongolia's taimen and the wild rivers and communities that support them.
