Dust

By EDGAR DANIEL KRAMER

Carthage is dust, and Nineveh; Babylon, proud and fair,
Has gone in the way of things that were, vanished into the air;
The jackal prowls through the dreary sands, lifting his howl to the moon,
And the winds swing over the cheerless wastes, singing a nameless tune.

Helen is dust, and Paris, too; Egypt, the dreamy-eyed,
Is only the breath of a whispered word, the ghost of a dream that has died;
Yet ever the earth and the stars roll on, according to God's own plan;
Carthage is dust, and Nineveh! What in God's scheme is Man?
