

FAME AND THE POET
By LORD DUNSANY

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

HARRY DE REVES, a Poet.

(This name, though of course of French origin, has become anglicised and is pronounced DE REEVS.)

DICK PRATTLE, a Lieutenant-Major of the Royal Horse Marines.

FAME.

FAME AND THE POET

SCENE

The Poet's rooms in London. Windows in back. A high screen in a corner.

Time: February 30th.

The POET is sitting at a table writing.

[Enter DICK PRATTLE.]

PRATTLE

Hullo, Harry.

DE REVES

Hullo, Dick. Good Lord, where are you from?

PRATTLE [casually]

The ends of the earth.

DE REVES

Well, I'm damned!

PRATTLE

Thought I'd drop in and see how you were getting on.

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

Well, that's splendid. What are you doing in London?

PRATTLE

Well, I wanted to see if I could get one or two decent ties to wear—you can get nothing out there—then I thought I'd have a look and see how London was getting on.

DE REVES

Splendid! How's everybody?

PRATTLE

All going strong.

DE REVES

That's good.

PRATTLE [seeing paper and ink]

But what are you doing?

DE REVES

Writing.

PRATTLE

Writing? I didn't know you wrote.

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

Yes, I've taken to it rather.

PRATTLE

I say—writing's no good. What do you write?

DE REVES

O, poetry.

PRATTLE

Poetry! Good Lord!

DE REVES

Yes, that sort of thing, you know.

PRATTLE

Good Lord! Do you make any money by it?

DE REVES

No. Hardly any.

PRATTLE

I say—why don't you chuck it?

DE REVES

O, I don't know. Some people seem to like my stuff, rather. That's why I go on.

FAME AND THE POET

PRATTLE

I'd chuck it if there's no money in it.

DE REVES

Ah, but then it's hardly in your line, is it? You'd hardly approve of poetry if there was money in it.

PRATTLE

O, I don't say that. If I could make as much by poetry as I can by betting I don't say I wouldn't try the poetry touch, only——

DE REVES

Only what?

PRATTLE

O, I don't know. Only there seems more sense in betting, somehow.

DE REVES

Well, yes. I suppose it's easier to tell what an earthly horse is going to do, than to tell what Pegasus——

PRATTLE

What's Pegasus?

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

O, the winged horse of poets.

PRATTLE

I say! You don't believe in a winged horse, do you?

DE REVES

In our trade we believe in all fabulous things. They all represent some large truth to us. An emblem like Pegasus is as real a thing to a poet as a Derby winner would be to you.

PRATTLE

I say. (Give me a cigarette. Thanks.) What? Then you'd believe in nymphs and fauns, and Pan, and all those kind of birds?

DE REVES

Yes. Yes. In all of them.

PRATTLE

Good Lord!

DE REVES

You believe in the Lord Mayor of London, don't you?

FAME AND THE POET

PRATTLE

Yes, of course; but what has-

DE REVES

Four million people or so made him Lord Mayor, didn't they? And he represents to them the wealth and dignity and tradition of——

PRATTLE

Yes; but, I say, what has all this——

DE REVES

Well, he stands for an idea to them, and they made him Lord Mayor, and so he is one . . .

PRATTLE

Well, of course he is.

DE REVES

In the same way Pan has been made what he is by millions; by millions to whom he represents world-old traditions.

PRATTLE [rising from his chair and stepping backwards, laughing and looking at the POET in a kind of assumed wonder]

I say . . . I say . . . You old heathen . . . but Good Lord . . .

FAME AND THE POET

[He bumps into the high screen behind, pushing it back a little.]

DE REVES

Look out! Look out!

PRATTLE

What? What's the matter?

DE REVES

The screen!

PRATTLE

O, sorry, yes. I'll put it right.

[He is about to go round behind it.]

DE REVES

No, don't go round there.

PRATTLE

What? Why not?

DE REVES

O, you wouldn't understand.

PRATTLE

Wouldn't understand? Why, what have you got?

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

O, one of those things. . . . You wouldn't understand.

PRATTLE

Of course I'd understand. Let's have a look.

[The POET walks towards PRATTLE and the screen. He protests no further. PRATTLE looks round the corner of the screen.]

An altar.

DE REVES [removing the screen altogether]
That is all. What do you make of it?

[An altar of Greek design, shaped like a pedestal, is revealed. Papers litter the floor all about it.]

PRATTLE

I say—you always were an untidy devil.

DE REVES

Well, what do you make of it?

PRATTLE

It reminds me of your room at Eton.

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

My room at Eton?

PRATTLE

Yes, you always had papers all over your floor.

DE REVES

O, yes——

PRATTLE

And what are these?

DE REVES

All these are poems; and this is my altar to Fame.

PRATTLE

To Fame?

DE REVES

The same that Homer knew.

PRATTLE

Good Lord!

DE REVES

Keats never saw her. Shelley died too young. She came late at the best of times, now scarcely ever.

FAME AND THE POET

PRATTLE

But, my dear fellow, you don't mean that you think there really is such a person?

DE REVES

I offer all my songs to her.

PRATTLE

But you don't mean you think you could actually see Fame?

DE REVES

We poets personify abstract things, and not poets only but sculptors and painters too.
All the great things of the world are those abstract things.

PRATTLE

But what I mean is, they're not really there, like you or me.

DE REVES

To us these things are more real than men, they outlive generations, they watch the passing of kingdoms: we go by them like dust;
they are still there, unmoved, unsmiling.

FAME AND THE POET

PRATTLE

But, but, you can't think that you could see Fame, you don't expect to see it?

DE REVES

Not to me. Never to me. She of the golden trumpet and Greek dress will never appear to me. . . . We all have our dreams.

PRATTLE

I say—what have you been doing all day?

DE REVES

I? O, only writing a sonnet.

PRATTLE

Is it a long one?

DE REVES

Not very.

PRATTLE

About how long is it?

DE REVES

About fourteen lines.

FAME AND THE POET

PRATTLE [impressively]

I tell you what it is.

DE REVES

Yes?

PRATTLE

I tell you what. You've been overworking yourself. I once got like that on board the Sandhurst, working for the passing-out exam. I got so bad that I could have seen anything.

DE REVES

Seen anything?

PRATTLE

Lord, yes; horned pigs, snakes with wings; anything; one of your winged horses even. They gave me some stuff called bromide for it. You take a rest.

DE REVES

But my dear fellow, you don't understand at all. I merely said that abstract things are to a poet as near and real and visible as one of your bookmakers or barmaids.

FAME AND THE POET

PRATTLE

I know. You take a rest.

DE REVES

Well, perhaps I will. I'd come with you to that musical comedy you're going to see, only I'm a bit tired after writing this; it's a tedious job. I'll come another night.

PRATTLE

How do you know I'm going to see a musical comedy?

DE REVES

Well, where would you go? Hamlet's on at the Lord Chamberlain's. You're not going there.

PRATTLE

Do I look like it?

DE REVES

No.

PRATTLE

Well, you're quite right. I'm going to see "The Girl from Bedlam." So long. I must push off now. It's getting late. You take a rest. Don't add another line to that sonnet; fourteen's quite enough. You take a rest. Don't have any dinner to-night, just rest. I was like that once myself. So long.

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

So long.

[Exit PRATTLE. DE REVES returns to his table and sits down.]

Good old Dick! He's the same as ever. Lord, how time passes.

[He takes his pen and his sonnet and makes a few alterations.]

Well, that's finished. I can't do any more to it.

[He rises and goes to the screen; he draws back part of it and goes up to the altar. He is about to place his sonnet reverently at the foot of the altar amongst his other verses.]

No, I will not put it there. This one is worthy of the altar.

[He places the sonnet upon the altar itself.]

If that sonnet does not give me fame, nothing that I have done before will give it to me, nothing that I ever will do.

[He replaces the screen and returns to his chair at the table. Twilight is coming on. He sits with his elbow on the table, his head on his hand, or however the actor pleases.]

FAME AND THE POET

Well, well. Fancy seeing Dick again. Well, Dick enjoys his life, so he's no fool. What was that he said? "There's no money in poetry. You'd better chuck it." Ten years' work and what have I to show for it? The admiration of men who care for poetry, and how many of them are there? There's a bigger demand for smoked glasses to look at eclipses of the sun. Why should Fame come to me? Haven't I given up my days for her? That is enough to keep her away. I am a poet; that is enough reason for her to slight me. Proud and aloof and cold as marble, what does Fame care for us? Yes, Dick is right. It's a poor game chasing illusions, hunting the intangible, pursuing dreams. Dreams? Why, we are ourselves dreams.

[He leans back in his chair.]

We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.

[He is silent for a while. Suddenly he lifts his head.]

FAME AND THE POET

My room at Eton, Dick said. An untidy mess.

[As he lifts his head and says these words, twilight gives place to broad daylight, merely as a hint that the author of the play may have been mistaken, and the whole thing may have been no more than a poet's dream.]

So it was, and it's an untidy mess there [looking at screen] too. Dick's right. I'll tidy it up. I'll burn the whole damned heap,

[He advances impetuously towards the screen.]

every damned poem that I was ever fool enough to waste my time on.

[He pushes back the screen. FAME in a Greek dress with a long golden trumpet in her hand is seen standing motionless on the altar like a marble goddess.]

So . . . you have come!

[For a while he stands thunderstruck. Then he approaches the altar.]

Divine fair lady, you have come.

[He holds up his hand to her and leads her down from the altar and into the centre of the stage. At whatever moment the actor finds it most convenient, he repossesses himself of the sonnet that he had *placed on the altar. He now offers it to

FAME AND THE POET

FAME.]*

This is my sonnet. Is it well done?

[FAME takes it and reads it in silence, while the POET watches her rapturously.]

FAME

You're a bit of all right.

DE REVES

What?

FAME

Some poet.

DE REVES

I—I—scarcely . . . understand.

FAME

You're IT.

DE REVES

But . . . it is not possible . . . are you she that knew Homer?

FAME

Homer? Lord, yes. Blind old bat, 'e couldn't see a yard.

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

O Heavens!

[FAME walks beautifully to the window.
She opens it and puts her head out.]

FAME [in a voice with which a woman in an upper storey would cry for help if the house was well alight]

Hi! Hi! Boys! Hi! Say, folks! Hi!

[The murmur of a gathering crowd is heard. FAME blows her trumpet.]

FAME

Hi, he's a poet! [Quickly, over her shoulder.]
What's your name?

DE REVES

De Reves.

FAME

His name's de Reves.

DE REVES

Harry de Reves.

FAME

His pals call him Harry.

FAME AND THE POET

THE CROWD

Hooray! Hooray! Hooray!

FAME

Say, what's your favourite colour?

DE REVES

I . . . I . . . I don't quite understand.

FAME

Well, which do you like best, green or blue.

DE REVES

O—er—blue.

[She blows her trumpet out of the window.]

No—er—I think green.

FAME

Green is his favourite colour.

THE CROWD

Hooray! Hooray! Hooray!

FAME

'Ere, tell us something. They want to know all about yer.

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

Wouldn't you perhaps . . . would they care to hear my sonnet, if you would—er . . .

FAME [picking up quill]

Here, what's this?

DE REVES

O, that's my pen.

FAME [after another blast on her trumpet]

He writes with a quill.

[Cheers from the CROWD.]

FAME [going to a cupboard]

Here, what have you got in here?

DE REVES

O . . . er . . . those are my breakfast things.

FAME [finding a dirty plate]

What have yer had on this one?

DE REVES [mournfully]

Oh, eggs and bacon.

FAME AND THE POET

FAME [at the window]

He has eggs and bacon for breakfast.

THE CROWD

Hip hip hip, hooray!

Hip hip hip, hooray!

Hip hip hip, hooray!

FAME

Hi, and what's this?

DE REVES [miserably]

O, a golf stick.

FAME

He's a man's man! He's a virile man!
He's a manly man!

[Wild cheers from the CROWD, this time only from women's voices.]

DE REVES

O, this is terrible. This is terrible. This is terrible.

[*FAME gives another peal on her horn.
She is about to speak.*]

DE REVES [solemnly and mournfully]

One moment, one moment . . .

FAME AND THE POET

FAME

Well, out with it.

DE REVES

For ten years, divine lady, I have worshipped you, offering all my songs . . . I find . . . I find I am not worthy . . .

FAME

O, you're all right.

DE REVES

No, no, I am not worthy. It cannot be. It cannot possibly be. Others deserve you more. I must say it! I cannot possibly love you. Others are worthy. You will find others. But I, no, no, no. It cannot be. It cannot be. Oh, pardon me, but it must not.

[Meanwhile FAME has been lighting one of his cigarettes. She sits in a comfortable chair, leans right back, and puts her feet right up on the table amongst the poet's papers.]

O, I fear I offend you. But—it cannot be.

FAME

O, that's all right, old bird; no offence. I ain't going to leave you.

FAME AND THE POET

DE REVES

But—but—but—I do not understand.

FAME

I've come to stay, I have.

[She blows a puff of smoke through her trumpet.]

CURTAIN.
