My Tomb

By JAMES E. WARREN, JR.

Perhaps an Insect-Man from Jupiter
Will some day crawl across my shattered tomb
Before he sets his sudden ship a-whir
And drops into the sky. Perhaps will come
Some weirder Thing from out the Further Dark
And stare above me with its metal face
To where his own world like a shifting spark
Looms love-lost in the loneliness of space.

They will find nothing but black winds that tore
That flesh and bone and iron into dust
A million years and ice a million more;
But they will prove some scientific trust
An ancient held. And they will never know
That I have died and that I loved you so.
