The Dream

By EDITH HURLEY

Out of the misty shadows came the dream,
If dream it were and not dread things to be.
Upon the shore of some vast midnight sea
I walked, and there was not a single gleam
Of moon or stars the darkness to redeem,
But eery Fear alone kept pace with me
As Earth went hurtling through Eternity,
And on the planet Silence reigned supreme.

A dim remembrance lingered with me still,
Of shattered stars that made the darkness bright;
The great sun shrinking like a pricked balloon;
Of frantic feet that climbed a lonely hill;
Of water rising, and the fall of night;
And I awoke and saw the trembling moon.
