

Ghost STORIES

Vol. 6

JUNE, 1929

No. 6

Contents

- My Friend in the Next World JOHN C. FLETCHER 6
This Boy Faced a Wrecked Life, Alone and Helpless—But He Found an Amazing Comrade!
- The Thing That Paid the Rent ARTHUR SAMUEL HOWE 12
Don't Miss This Bewildering Account of an Actual Occurrence in Quincy, Mass.!
- The Château of Laughing Phantoms GEORGE A. SCOTT 13
Did Unseen Killers Lurk in the Ruined Castle? The Two Americans Learned the Fearful Truth
- The Hand THEODORE DREISER, Author of The Genius 16
A Powerful Story of Uncarthy Revenge. By a World-Famous Writer
- Jealous Ghost DOROTHY VENNER 23
The Pretty Artist Vowed She Would Return from the World of Phantoms and Steal Her Chum's Lover! Read What Followed
- How a Spirit Corrected the Standard Dictionary STUART PALMER 30
The Founder of the Literary Digest Vouches for This Incredible Story of a Ghostly Message from Henry Ward Beecher
- The Invisible Man at the Helm WIN BROOKS 33
The Old Skipper Believed His Dead Son Guided the Ship Through Storm and Danger. Was It True?
- The Wraith in the Picture A True Story by WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD 37
A Noted New York Reporter Tells of His Astounding Adventure in the Home of an English Lord
- A Crystal Gazer's Crime PAUL ERNST 42
She Dared to Use Occult Means in an Attempt to Destroy Her Rival—and the Result Was Terrifying
- The Ghost of Doctor Harris NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE 45
One of the Greatest American Novelists Relates His Own Extraordinary Experience with a Specter
- Can the Dead Help the Living? SAMRI FRIKELL 47
Sir Arthur Conan Doyle Gives a Startling Answer to an Important Question
- Haunted Hollywood WILBERT WADLEIGH 48
How the Devil Cult Fought to Enslave Elinor Dean, the Beautiful Actress!
- The Mystery of the Spirit Painters ARNOLD FOUNTAIN 56
An Ignorant French Miner Receives Occult Aid in Painting Fifty-Seven Masterpieces!
- The Room of Yellow Shadows WILLIAM STEVENS 57
Ghoulis Shadows Whirled Around the Walls—Without Apparent Cause. Read How a Chicago Newspaper Man Solved the Riddle
- Marked With a Curse 300 Years Old RITA MARTINEZ 62
This Charming Southern Girl Was the Victim of a Feud that Reached Beyond the Grave
- The Spider GRACE OURSLER 68
The Weird Mystery of the Tivoli Theater Rises to Its Astounding Climax in a Séance on the Stage
- The Meeting Place ROBERT NAPIER 76
Absorbing Stories of Real Apparitions, Contributed by Our Readers
- Were You Born in June? STELLA KING 79
Here Are the Planetary Conditions That Govern YOUR Happiness This Month!
- Spirit Tales COUNT CAGLIOSTRO 81
John Singer Sargent Returns—The Adventure of the Skeptical Poet—and Other True Stories

Published Monthly by THE CONSTRUCTIVE PUBLISHING CORPORATION, Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J.
Editorial and General Offices, Macfadden Building, 1926 Broadway, N. Y.

Charles Mendel, President William Thompson, Secretary

M. L. Wilson, Jr., Advertising Manager, Graybar Building, 420 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.

Entered as second class matter April 30th, 1926, at the Post Office at Dunellen, N. J., under the act of March 3rd, 1879. Additional entry at New York, N. Y.

Copyright, 1929, by THE CONSTRUCTIVE PUBLISHING CORPORATION. Copyright also in Canada and Great Britain. All rights reserved.
Price 25c a copy in U. S.—30c in Canada. Subscription price $2.50 a year in the United States and its possessions; also Cuba, Mexico and Panama. All other countries including Canada $4.00 per year.

Chicago Office: 168 North Michigan Blvd., C. H. Shattuck, Manager.

London Agents: Atlas Publishing & Distributing Co., Ltd., 18 Bride Lane, London, E. C.

"Contributors are especially advised to be sure to retain copies of their contributions; otherwise they are taking an unnecessary risk. Every possible effort will be made in our organization to return unavailable manuscripts, photographs and drawings; but we will not be responsible for any losses of such matter contributed."

PRINTED BY THE ART COLOR PRINTING CO., DUNELLEN, N. J., U. S. A.

The GHOST of Doctor HARRIS

This great novelist came into sudden contact with the spirit world, in a Boston public library—of all places! And his marvelous experience occurred at brightest noonday!

A True Account of a Remarkable Apparition

By NATHANIEL
HAWTHORNE

EDITOR'S NOTE: This story has never been printed among Hawthorne's collected works. It was first told to a group of friends gathered at the home of Mr. J. P. Pemberton, in Liverpool, England, when Hawthorne was the American Consul there. The famous novelist subsequently recorded the facts as given below, but the manuscript never saw the light of day during his lifetime.

I AM afraid this ghost story will bear a very faded aspect when transferred to paper. Whatever effect it had on you, or whatever charm it retains in your memory, is perhaps to be attributed to the favorable circumstances under which it was originally told.

We were sitting, I remember, late in the evening, in your drawing room, where the lights of the chandelier were so muffled as to produce a delicious obscurity through which the fire diffused a dim red glow. In this rich twilight the feelings of the party had been properly attuned by some tales of English superstition, and the lady of Smithills Hall had just been describing that Bloody Footstep which marks the threshold of her old mansion, when your Yankee guest (zealous for the honor of his country, and desirous of proving that his dead compatriots have the same ghostly privileges as other dead people, if they think it worth while to use them) began a story of something wonderful that long ago had happened to himself.

Possibly in the verbal narrative he may have assumed a little more license than would be allowable in a written record. For the sake of the artistic effect, he may then have thrown in, here and there, a few slight circumstances which he will not think it proper to retain in what he now puts forth as the sober statement of a veritable fact.

A good many years ago (it must be as many as fifteen, perhaps more, and while I was still a bachelor) I resided at Boston, in the United States. In that city there is a large and long-established library, styled the Athenæum, connected with which is a reading room, well supplied with foreign and American periodicals and newspapers. A splendid edifice has been erected by the proprietors of the institution; but, at the period I speak of, it was contained within a large, old mansion, formerly the town residence of an eminent citizen of Boston.

THE reading room (a spacious hall, with the group of the Laocoön at one end, and the Belvedere Apollo at the other) was frequented by not a few elderly merchants, retired from business, by clergymen and lawyers, and by such literary men as we had amongst us. These good people were mostly old, leisurely, and somnolent, and used to nod and doze for hours together, with the newspapers before them—ever and anon recovering themselves so far as to read a word or two of the politics of the day—sitting, as it were, on the boundary of the Land of Dreams, and having little to do with this world, except through the newspapers which they so tenaciously grasped.

One of these worthies, whom I occasionally saw there, was the Reverend Doctor Harris, a Unitarian clergyman of considerable repute and eminence. He was very far advanced in life, not less than eighty years old, and probably more; and he resided, I think, at Dorchester, a suburban village in the immediate vicinity of Boston. I had never been personally acquainted with this good old clergyman, but had heard of him all my life as a noteworthy man; so that when he was first pointed out to me I looked at him with a certain speciality of attention, and always subsequently eyed him with a degree of interest whenever I happened to see him at the Athenæum or elsewhere.

HE was a withered, infirm, but brisk old gentleman, with snow-white hair, a somewhat stooping figure, but yet a remarkable alacrity of movement. I remember it was in the street that I first noticed him. The Doctor was plodding along with a staff, but turned smartly about on being addressed by the gentleman who was with me, and responded with a good deal of vivacity.

"Who is he?" I inquired, as soon as the distinguished stranger had passed.

"The Reverend Doctor Harris, of Dorchester," replied my companion; and from that time I often saw him, and never forgot his aspect. His especial haunt was the Athenæum. There I used to see him daily, and almost always with a newspaper—the Boston Post, which was the leading journal of the Democratic Party in the Northern States. As old Doctor Harris had been a noted Democrat during his more active life, it was a very natural thing that he should still like to read the Boston Post. There his reverend figure was accustomed to sit day after day, in the selfsame chair by the fireside; and, by degrees, seeing him there so constantly, I began to look towards him as I entered the reading room, and felt that a kind of acquaintance, at least on my part, was established. Not that I had any reason (as long as this venerable person remained in the body) to suppose that he ever noticed me; but by some subtle connection, that white-haired, infirm, yet vivacious figure of an old clergyman became associated with my idea and recollection of the place.

One day especially (about noon, as was generally his hour) I am perfectly certain that I had seen this figure of old Doctor Harris, and taken my customary note of him, although I remember nothing in his appearance at all different from what I had seen on many previous occasions.

But, that very evening, a friend said to me, "Did you hear that old Doctor Harris is dead?"

"No," said I very quietly, "and it cannot be true; for I saw him at the Athenæum today."

"You must be mistaken," rejoined my friend. "He is certainly dead!" And he confirmed the fact with such special circumstances that I could no longer doubt it.

My friend has often since assured me that I seemed much startled at the intelligence; but, as well as I can recollect, I believe that I was very little disturbed, if at all, but set down the apparition as a mistake of my own, or perhaps, the interposition of a familiar idea into the place amid the circumstances with which I had been accustomed to associate it.

The next day, as I ascended the steps of the Athenæum, I remember thinking within myself, "Well, I never shall see old Doctor Harris again!"

With this thought in my mind, as I opened the door of the reading room, I glanced towards the spot and chair where Doctor Harris usually sat, and there, to my astonishment, sat the gray, infirm figure of the deceased Doctor, reading the newspaper as was his wont! His own death must have been recorded that very morning in that very newspaper!

I HAVE no recollection of being greatly discomposed at the moment, nor indeed that I felt any extraordinary emotion whatever. Probably, if ghosts were in the habit of coming among us, they would coincide with the ordinary train of affairs, and melt into them so familiarly that we should not be shocked at their presence. At all events, so it was in this instance. I looked through the newspapers as usual, and turned over the periodicals, taking about as much interest in their contents as at other times. Once or twice, no doubt, I may have lifted my eyes from the page to look again at the venerable Doctor, who ought then to have been lying in his coffin dressed out for the grave, but who felt such interest in the Boston Post as to come back from the other world to read it the morning after his death. One might have supposed that he would have cared more about the novelties of the sphere to which (Continued on page 91)

Nath. Hawthorne

famous New England writer—from a portrait made about the time of his extraordinary experience with a phantom

The Ghost of Doctor Harris

(Continued from page 46)

he had just been introduced than about the politics he had left behind him!

The apparition took no notice of me, nor behaved otherwise in any respect than on any previous day. Nobody but myself seemed to notice him; and yet the old gentlemen roundabout the fire, beside his chair, were his lifelong acquaintances, who were perhaps thinking of his death, and who in a day or two would deem it a proper courtesy to attend his funeral.

I HAVE forgotten how the ghost of Doctor Harris took its departure from the Athenæum on this occasion, or, in fact, whether the ghost or I went first. This equanimity, and almost indifference, on my part—the careless way in which I glanced at so singular a mystery and laid it aside—is what now surprises me as much as anything else in the affair.

From that time, for a long while thereafter—for weeks at least, and I know not but for months—I used to see the figure of Doctor Harris quite as frequently as before his death. It grew to be so common that at length I regarded the venerable defunct no more than any other of the old fogies who basked before the fire and dozed over the newspapers.

It was but a ghost—nothing but thin air—not tangible nor appreciable, nor demanding any attention from a man of flesh and blood! I cannot recollect any cold shuddering, any awe, any repugnance, any emotion whatever, such as would be suitable and decorous on beholding a visitant from the spiritual world. It is very strange, but such is the truth. It appears excessively odd to me now that I did not adopt such means as I readily might to ascertain whether the appearance had solid substance, or was merely gaseous and vapory. I might have brushed against him, have jostled his chair, or have trodden accidentally on his poor old toes. I might have snatched the Boston Post—unless that were an apparition, too—out of his shadowy hands. I might have tested him in a hundred ways; but I did nothing of the kind.

PERHAPS I was loath to destroy the illusion, and to rob myself of so good a ghost story, which might probably have been explained in some very commonplace way. Perhaps, after all, I had a secret dread of the old phenomenon, and therefore kept within my limits, with an instinctive caution which I mistook for indifference. Be this as it may, here is the fact. I saw the figure, day after day, for a considerable space of time, and took no pains to ascertain whether it was a ghost or no. I never, to my knowledge, saw him come into the reading room or depart from it. There sat Doctor Harris in his customary chair, and I can say little else about him.

After a certain period—I really know not how long—I began to notice, or to fancy, a peculiar regard in the old gentleman's aspect towards myself. I sometimes found him gazing at me, and, unless I deceived myself, there was a sort of expectancy in his face. His spectacles, I think, were shoved up, so that his bleared eyes might meet my own. Had he been a living man I should have flattered myself that Doctor Harris was, for some reason or other, interested in me and desirous of a personal acquaintance. Being a ghost, and amenable to ghostly laws, it was natural to conclude that he was waiting to be spoken to before delivering whatever message he wished to impart. But, if so, the ghost had shown the bad judgment common among the spiritual brotherhood, both as regarded the place of interview and the person whom he had selected as the recipient of his communication. In the reading room of the Athenæum conversation is strictly forbidden, and I could not have addressed the apparition without drawing the instant notice and indignant frowns of the slumbrous old gentlemen around me:

I MYSELF, too, at that time, was as shy as any ghost, and followed the ghosts' rule never to speak first. And what an absurd figure should I have made, solemnly and awfully addressing what must have appeared, in the eyes of all the rest of the company, an empty chair! Besides, I had never been introduced to Doctor Harris, dead or alive, and I am not aware that social regulations are to be abrogated by the accidental fact of one of the parties having crossed the imperceptible line which separates the other party from the spiritual world. If ghosts throw off all conventionalism among themselves, it does not therefore follow that it can be safely dispensed with by those who are still hampered with flesh and blood.

For such reasons as these—and reflecting, moreover, that the deceased Doctor might burden me with some disagreeable task, with which I had no business nor wish to be concerned—I stubbornly resolved to have nothing to say to him. To this determination I adhered; and not a syllable ever passed between the ghost of Doctor Harris and myself.

To the best of my recollection, I never observed the old gentleman either enter the reading room or depart from it, or move from his chair, or lay down the newspaper, or exchange a look with any person in the company, unless it were myself. He was not by any means invariably in his place. In the evening, for instance, though often at the reading room myself, I never saw him. It was at the brightest noontide that I used to behold him, sitting within the most comfortable focus of the glowing fire, as real and lifelike an object (except that he was so very old, and of an ashen complexion) as any other in the room.

After a long while of this strange intercourse, if such it can be called, I remember—once at least, and I know not but oftener—a sad, wistful, disappointed gaze, which the ghost fixed upon me from beneath his spectacles; a melancholy look of helplessness, which, if my heart had not been as hard as a paving-stone, I could hardly have withstood. But I did withstand it; and I think I saw him no more after this last appealing look, which still dwells in my memory as perfectly as while my own eyes were encountering the dim and bleared eyes of the ghost. And whenever I recall this strange passage of my life, I see the old, withered figure of Doctor Harris, sitting in his accustomed chair, the Boston Post in his hand, his spectacles shoved upwards—and gazing at me as I close the door of the reading room, with that wistful, appealing, hopeless, helpless look. It is too late now: his grave has been grass-grown this many and many a year; and I hope he has found rest in it without any aid from me.

I HAVE only to add that it was not until long after I had ceased to encounter the ghost that I became aware how very odd and strange the whole affair had been; and even now I am made sensible of its strangeness chiefly by the wonder and incredulity of those to whom I tell the story.