LAST MEETING

7/18/12 New England 1 at Montreal 2 L

PLAYER NOTES

- Lee Nguyen is the only Revolution player to score a goal against Montreal ... he had the Revs' lone goal against the Impact on July 18
- Kelyn Rowe recorded the assist on Lee Nguyen's goal on July 18
- In the teams' earlier meetings, Darrius Barnes made his first start of 2012, playing center back
- Sainey Nyassi made his first appearance of the year in the July 18 match at Saputo Stadium, playing on the field at the same time as his twin brother, Sanna, who scored the game-winning goal for Montreal

SERIES INFORMATION

- The Revolution is 0-1-0 – both all-time and on the road – against Montreal, with the teams' only meeting coming on July 18, at Saputo Stadium
- Sunday's meeting will be Montreal's first-ever trip to Gillette Stadium
- The match on Sunday will be the second meeting between the two teams this season, with a third meeting scheduled on October 27 at Saputo Stadium – the teams' final match of the season – to round out the season series
- The Revs are 10-10-6 all-time against expansion teams in their inaugural seasons ... that record includes two draws with the Houston Dynamo in 2006, which was considered an expansion team after relocating from San Jose.
- Since 2005, New England is 9-5-6 against expansion teams in their inaugural seasons ... the Revs went 1-5-0 against the Chicago Fire and Miami Fusion in 1998, just two years after MLS' inaugural season.

PLAYER TO WATCH

8 – PATRICE BERNIER

Montreal midfielder Patrice Bernier leads Montreal in scoring in this, the Impact's first season in MLS. He has six goals and six assists in 18 appearances. The 32-year old has buried all four of his penalty-kick attempts, including a 28th-minute goal when the Revs and Impact first met at Saputo Stadium on July 18. Bernier began his playing career in Montreal in 2000 – before leaving to play overseas in 2002 – but returned to expansion Montreal ahead of the 2012 campaign.

SAINÉY NYASSI

By Julia Lytle

After living in the U.S. for five years, what are some things that you are still getting used to?

The food - obviously, I love it now - and the weather. I used to hate it when it comes to winter, but now I'm a bit used to it. In Africa, it does not get that cold. It doesn't snow and it doesn't get cold. I'm pretty used to the heat, but I'm now in the system. I'm used to a lot of things around here.

Your twin brother, Sanna, plays for the Montreal Impact and scored the game-winning goal when the Revs visited Saputo Stadium on July 18. What is it like playing against him?

It was pretty exciting. When we lost, I was still happy for him. After the game, I congratulated him on his goal. As soon as I got on the field, I went in with so much confidence that I would at least help the team out, but it didn't happen. All around it was exciting and it was fun. Since we were young, we've always been competitive. We always compete against each other, we always fight. Everybody wants to win. But hopefully when they come here, I will get him.

Are you and your brother close?

Yes, growing up I was the closest with him. We still talk a lot; almost every day we talk or Skype.

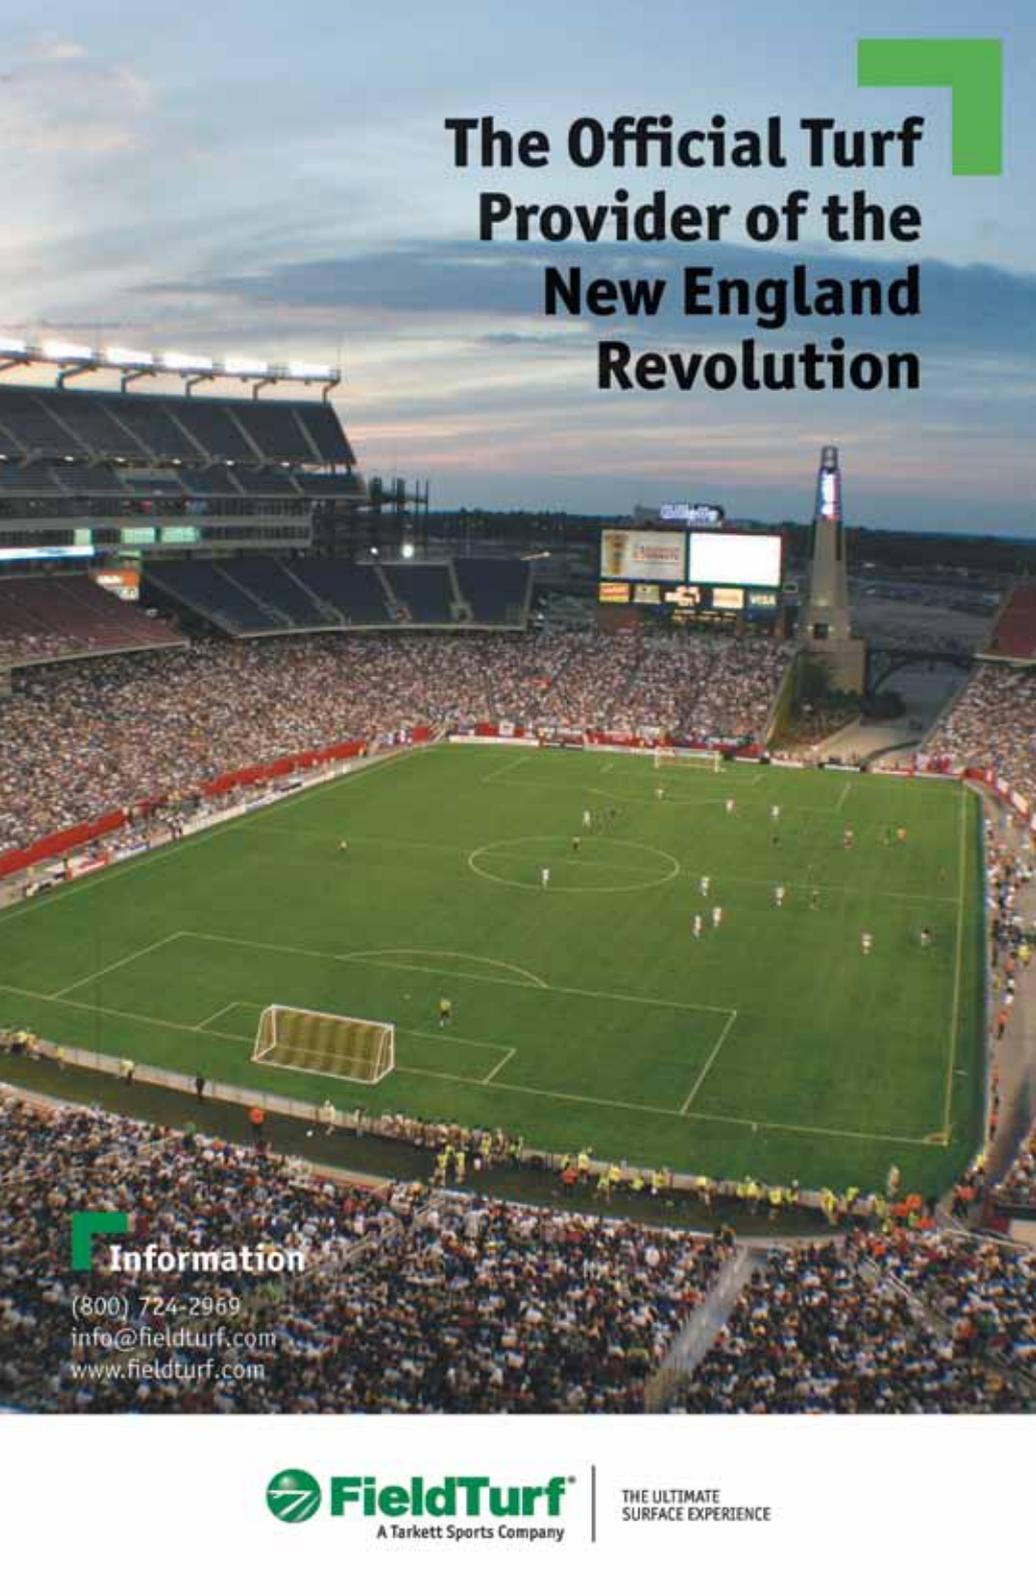

You are currently fasting in observance of Ramadan. Does that affect your training?

Yes, it does. I wake up early and eat before the sun rises, and then I wait until it is dark to eat again. Sometimes I take a day off. If we have a game, I will take one or two days off before the game, and I won't fast.

What is something you want your fans to know about you?

They know a lot about me already because I get in touch with them through social networks like Twitter and Facebook. I was out for about six months with a hamstring injury, but I'm back and I'm 100 percent now. I played my first game of the season against my brother, and I felt good. I'll get back to my playing form hopefully.

The Right Guy for the Job

Jack-of-all-trades Ryan Guy embraces role under Jay Heaps

By Tim Miller

Revolution Communications

Want to make Ryan Guy laugh? Ask him what field position he considers himself to be.

Want to stump Ryan Guy? Ask him where he will be playing next weekend.

Both answers will be the same.

"I'd say on the field," chuckles Guy. "At this point and time I'm very happy saying I play all over."

Since joining the Revs in June 2011, Ryan Guy has fought to earn time on the pitch, wherever that may be. After one start and four substitute appearances, Guy earned five straight starts at the end of the 2011 season, earning the respect of his teammates and coaching staff. He'd have to practically start all over ahead of the 2012 season: a change and a challenge Guy welcomed.

"I've always believed that change is for the better and it's a matter of the personnel if they make that change better. From the start, Jay's been very positive," said Guy. "That's the attitude that I try to have day in and day out. It was certainly a challenge but one I certainly took on full-force."

In 12 appearances – including 10 starts – under Jay Heaps, Guy has seen time from box to box. With four starts at right wing, four at forward, two in the central mid-field and countless mid-game shifts to the backline, Guy makes transitions look easy. He'll be the first to admit that it isn't always the case.

"It's been a little hectic for me: switching in between positions isn't something that I'm totally used to. I enjoy playing multiple positions: every position brings new challenges and I feel that I can bring different parts of my skill set to each position," said Guy.

Game preparation has been a staple of Heaps' coaching style in reviewing film and opponent style tendencies. The weekly routine for Guy is a little bit different than his teammates. Heaps will bring Guy into his office to tell him his thoughts on the upcoming week and where he foresees Guy playing. It's the first time during the week that Guy mentally flips a positional switch in his mind. It won't be the last time, as he may be asked to play elsewhere the day before or minutes before the final whistle.

"The truth is I need to have multiple switches ready to turn on and off because I know throughout the course of a game whether its injuries or substitutions or the way the match is panning out, I know I have to be able to adapt and change my game based on where I'm put," said Guy.

Every team has a utility player. The position is created out of necessity. But who does the coach turn to? It all comes down to which player in the locker room a head coach has enough trust in to step in anywhere, at any point. That doesn't mean "maybe" he'd fit in at right back or he "could" balance out a second forward at top; he "will" and he "does" are instead used.

"I know [Jay] expects a lot from me and I certainly expect a lot from myself," said Guy. "Having that and the respect of the guys on the team, knowing they trust me wherever I'm going to be put on the field I think really helps."

Being a point person comes with consistency. Guy believes his greatest accomplishment this season was bouncing back into that starting role after missing four matches from April 28 to May 12 with right calf tightness.

Sometimes, leadership hits home in the locker room the most when a key player can battle through the adversity created by an injury.

"Hopefully that's helped the team with morale knowing guys can go down and come back and still assert themselves as a positive part of the team," said Guy.

Most impressive about Guy though is his humility in accepting his position on this year's team. He hasn't scored a goal this season, but he's been the Revolution's Sovereign Bank Man of the Match in two of the last three matches.. His success on the field is determined by helping make his teammates around him look good.

"A team player really has to embrace all of the facets of the game. For me, I understand that my role is exactly that: to have the mentality that I can be put anywhere on the field," said Guy.

As long as Guy gets to play and is on the field, it doesn't really matter to him where he's put. Jay Heaps quipped that in the July 21 match at Sporting KC when Matt Reis went down briefly in stoppage time, Guy would have been the go-to person to play in net for the remainder of the match. Guy hasn't been training with the goalkeepers since, but he knows that as the Revs make a push for the playoffs, he'll be ready to step in as needed.

"Everyone has something different that they're working on," said Guy. "Being the utility man isn't better or worse, it's just an integral part of the team and I'm happy to be that guy."
