PHIL MALONEY

Every game is important

By TOM WATT
Vancouver Province

"Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?" — Robert Browning.

If Phil Maloney permits himself celestial glances, he manages to keep the stars from his eyes.

The general manager and coach of the Vancouver Canucks will take what he considers within the grasp of his National Hockey League team and leave the dreams to those who sleep.

"I should sit up and pound the table and say that we're going to finish first," he says, sitting up and pounding the table. "But I've got to be realistic."

Maloney reviews his roster; discusses the NHL schedule and the Canucks' opposition in their newly-aligned division; looks at last season's final standings and concludes:

"This is the first year since Vancouver came into the NHL that we have a realistic shot at the playoffs. This has got to put everyone in a better frame of mind."

But, as Maloney prepared to open his first training camp as coach and g.m., he was aware that four years of frustration and defeat had left their marks.

"Everybody's got problems," he said. "All I ask is that they put them aside while we get on with the job of winning. When you're winning, all of those problems suddenly seem less significant.

"All I ask these guys is to believe that when I do something, I'm doing it because I think it will help the team. If I play a guy out of his normal position, it's because I believe that's where I think he'll help us most."

What Maloney should have going for him most is the record of the Canucks after he took over as coach on January 15, 1974.

Canucks managed only 25 points in 41 games prior to his appointment. But they came on to compile 34 points in 37 games for Maloney, hockey's 'Silver Fox'.

Maloney vowed he'd get Vancouver out of last place in the Eastern Division, which he did, and in the process Canucks accumulated the best record of any NHL Vancouver team.

This season he not only expects Canucks to make the playoffs, which would mean finishing at least third, but to finish second in their division.

Maloney has said that the only thing he will concede is the fact Chicago might finish first in the division that includes St. Louis, Minnesota, the expansion Kansas City Scouts and Vancouver.

In conclusion, Maloney points out: "Naturally, every time we play teams in our own division we have to consider the games as four-pointers.

"But then . . . every game is so important."

GARY SMITH

Born: Ottawa, Ontario, Feb. 4, 1944
 Height: 6'4" — Weight: 215 lbs.
 Position: GOALTENDER

There was a time, not too many months ago, when rumors were running rampant that the Canucks were talking trade with the Montreal Canadiens for a goaltender. Bunny Larocque, hockey gossips insisted, would be making his way to the West Coast now that Ken Dryden had returned to the NHL.

"Smitty's got news for you," goaltender Gary Smith told reporters during a summer golf tournament. "We won't be needing him because this kid here is good for another 65 games . . . maybe even more."

It didn't take Smith long to win the hearts of Vancouver hockey followers. In his initial season with the Canucks the towering 30-year-old established all sorts of club records . . . three shutouts, 20 victories, 65 games played . . . and now he plans to pioneer another first: namely leading the Canucks to their first-ever playoff finish.

Smitty blanked Atlanta twice and California once.

"It's the greatest feeling in the world," he says, confidently. "When you skate off that ice after 60 minutes without making a mistake, you're on top of the world."

And that's precisely where Gary Smith enjoys life to its fullest . . . right on top.

Position: GOALTENDER

When you're prepared to invest $30,000 or $40,000 of the company's money in a potential starter for your hockey club, it's always wise to check out the quality of the stock you're purchasing.

And that's precisely what Canucks' g.m. and coach Phil Maloney did during the summer months when he began his search for some goaltending support to back up Gary Smith.

"Everywhere I looked, everybody I talked to, the name Ken Lockett kept cropping up," Maloney says today. "My spies (and scouts) told me he could be a real 'sleeper' and after watching him closely during training camp, I can see why."

Lockett last year recorded the second best goals-against average in the American Hockey League with the Baltimore Clippers. Although he's 27 years old, this will be only his third full season of pro hockey following completion of his studies at the University of Guelph.

He was purchased by Vancouver outright from the Baltimore club . . . high quality stock.

JOCELYN GUEVREMONT

Born: Montreal, Quebec,
March 1, 1951
Height: 6'2" — Weight: 190 lbs.
Position: DEFENCE

Offensively, there aren't too many more impressive defencemen in the National Hockey League than Jocelyn Guevremont.

His big, booming shot resulted in 15 goals last year—not to mention a berth on the 1973-74 East Division all-star team.

"But I've got to work harder on my defensive game," Guevremont says candidly. "If we can improve our goals-against record this year there's no way we won't make the playoffs."

Guevremont is entering his fourth season with the Vancouver Canucks and during training camp was carrying himself as a real veteran by helping the rookie defencemen in camp.

"I kept in good shape during the summer and could hardly wait for training camp to get started," he says. "And now I can't wait for the regular season to get going."

BOB DAILEY

Born: Kingston, Ont., May 3, 1953
Height: 6'5" – Weight: 215 lbs.
Position: DEFENCE

When Phil Maloney and associates sat in on the 1974 amateur draft sessions last May, they knew from the outset they didn't have a first-round pick.

And nobody was squawking.

Because the previous year the Canucks gave up their 1974 number one amateur draft in order to grab gorilla-built Bob Dailey, a young man tabbed by everyone in NHL circles as "a potential all-star".

Dailey missed just two games in his rookie season last year with the Canucks and at the tender age of 21, his future in hockey is unlimited.

The 6'5", 215-pounder let the opposition know of his presence by leading the club in penalty minutes with 143 . . . and with seven goals and 17 assists he was third highest among Canuck defencemen in scoring.

"You can assess his value to our club this way," Maloney points out, "There isn't a team in the NHL that hasn't approached us trying to make a deal for him."

Dailey has successfully leaped the most difficult hockey hurdle . . . jumping into the NHL right out of junior and adjusting as though he'd been around for years.

BARRY WILKINS

Born: Toronto, Ontario, Feb. 28, 1947
 Height: 6'0" – Weight: 190 lbs.
 Position: DEFENCE

Barry Wilkins has been through the good, the bad, and the ugly with the Vancouver Hockey Club.

He's one of the originals and a chap who is frothing at the bit when he looks at the NHL's re-alignment. Three clubs from each division qualify for playoffs this season . . . and as far as Wilkins is concerned, the long, tiresome wait is over.

"Vancouver fans deserve a playoff contender," he says. "They've been patient long enough. Now it's up to us."

Wilkins played in all 78 games for the Canucks last season, shaking the injury bug that haunted him the year before.

In terms of service, he's the veteran back on the blueline. He now makes his home in Vancouver and wants nothing more than to cash his first-ever playoff cheque in the NHL as a member of the Canucks.

TRACY PRATT

Born: New York City, March 8, 1943
 Height: 6'2" — Weight: 195 lbs.
 Position: DEFENSE

If sheer guts and desire make a hockey player, then Tracy Pratt is a natural.

He bolstered the Canucks' defence immeasurably upon his arrival via Buffalo during the Christmas holiday season and there was "no cotton pickin' way" general manager and coach Phil Maloney was going to allow him to fly the coop during the off-season.

Pratt's contract had expired at the conclusion of the 1973-74 season. There was a guy beckoning (cawing?) from across the hall of the Canucks' offices for his services but Tracy elected to remain in the National Hockey League.

He came back . . . and the Canuck faithful are glad he did.

"I don't pick up every check I'm supposed to in our end of the rink," Pratt says, "but I make sure I get at least a piece of everybody. I make sure they know I'm around."

Pratt and John Gould arrived in Vancouver when Punch Imlach dealt them from Buffalo in exchange for Jerry Korab.

"This is my home," Pratt says today. "This is where I want to be."
 Welcome home, Tracy, on behalf of 15,570 paying customers.

DENNIS KEARNS

Born: Kingston, Ontario, Sept. 27, 1945

Height: 5'8" - Weight: 182 lbs.

Position: DEFENCE

Injuries played a major role in the career of Dennis Kearns throughout the 1973-74 season.

The smooth-skating defenceman made the mistake of landing on the bottom of a three-man pile at New York's Madison Square Garden in late February and spent the balance of the schedule watching proceedings from the press box. He came out of that collision with a cracked bone in his right foot.

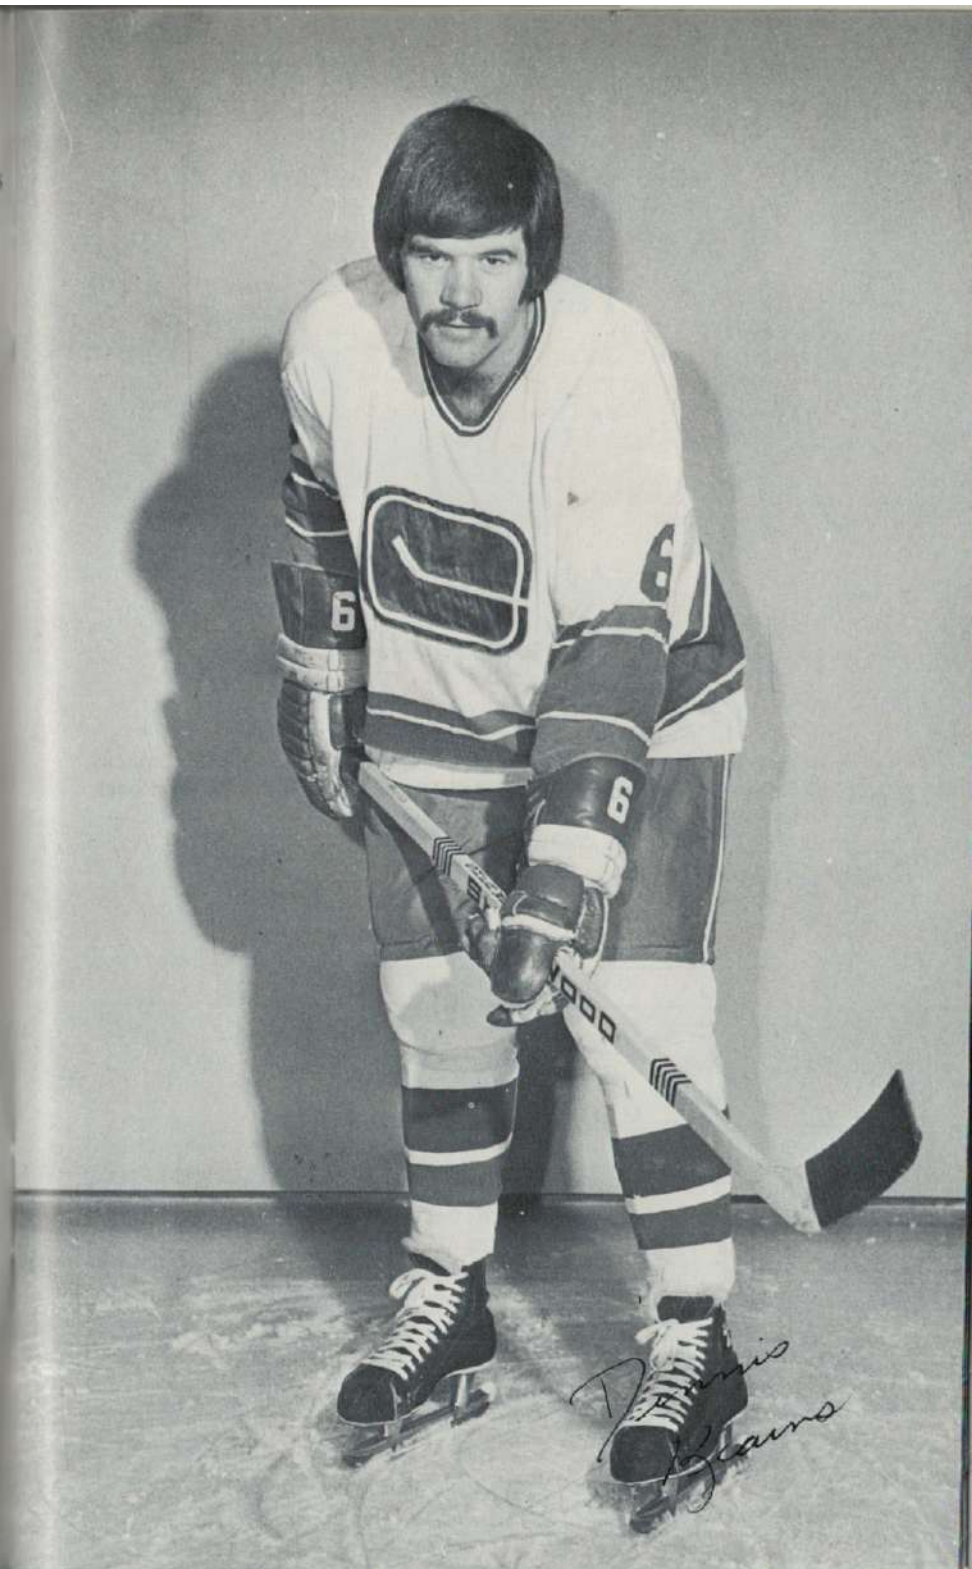

Kearns' biggest contribution over the years with Vancouver has been playing the point on Canuck power-plays.

"He moves the puck around with the best of them," says Babe Pratt, a defenceman of note during his hey-days in the NHL. "Dennis keeps his cool under pressure and he's got good hockey sense."

Kearns is entering his fourth full year as a member of the Canucks after being drafted from the Chicago Black Hawks' organization back in June, 1971.

Off to one side of the Canucks' dressing room is a monstrous bit of machinery known as a 'universal gym'. It provides numerous exercises for an athlete . . . and most days throughout the summer months you could find Andre Boudrias sweating it out, working to get himself into top physical condition for the 1974-75 NHL season.

"This is going to be our year," Boudrias, the Canucks' all-time scoring leader, says. "With realignment, we're at last given a serious chance at making the playoffs."

Boudrias potted 16 goals and 59 assists last year for 75 points, as many as Boston's Johnny Bucyk and more than the Goldsworthys, Cournoyers, and Pete Mahovlichs.

"We were put together as a line late into the season," Boudrias says. "I'm looking forward to starting the year with them on my line. We'll be scoring . . . you can count on that!"

DON LEVER

Born: South Porcupine, Ontario,
Nov. 14, 1952
Height: 5'11" — Weight: 175 lbs.
Position: CENTRE

There was a night in the Chicago airport, late into the 1973-74 Canucks' NHL schedule, when young Don Lever fell fast asleep on a chair next to the airlines' ticket window.

It was between flights . . . between games . . . and the Canucks' number one amateur draft choice of 1973 was exhausted.

"I used to think we travelled a lot in junior hockey," Lever was to say later. "People warned me about how tough it was to hack it in the NHL and I didn't believe them."

Lever didn't only 'hack' it . . . he played in all 78 games for Vancouver in his initial season and matched that total again last year.

To boot, he almost doubled his scoring output the second time around with 23 goals as compared to 12 in his rookie year.

Without a doubt, Lever's here to stay.

Every time g.m. and coach Phil Maloney talks trade with a rival NHL club, the name Lever inevitably crops up.

It took him awhile to get untracked, but when the puck started bouncing for Canucks' prize rookie Dennis Ververgaert last season he had everybody in the National Hockey League sitting up and taking notice.

He finished the regular schedule in a flurry—26 goals and 31 assists—and at the age of 21, provides the Canucks with the scoring punch they so badly need on the right side.

"It's a big jump to the NHL right out of junior hockey," g.m. and coach Phil Maloney says. "A guy has to make a lot of adjustments and Ververgaert proved he can handle it."

Ververgaert was the Canucks' top amateur draft pick in June of 1973 and looms today as a potential all-star in the NHL.

"Had he gotten off to a quicker start," says New York Rangers' Emile Francis, "he would have given the Calder Trophy voters a lot of headaches."

As it was, Ververgaert compiled enough ballots to finish fifth in the Calder race . . . a category restricted to the league's finest rookies.

HAROLD SNEPSTS

Born: Edmonton, Alberta,
October 24, 1954
Height: 6'3" — Weight: 195 lbs.
Position: DEFENCE

Rookie Harold Snepsts was the sensation of the Canucks' fall training camp. The big guy from the Edmonton juniors last year had the Vancouver scouting staff sitting up and taking notice from the first minute he stepped on the ice.

"He does three things well and if he continues to do them he can play this game in the NHL," Phil Maloney told reporters at camp. Then he listed the three attributes:

- He advances the puck to his forwards without making a production of it.
- When he takes an opponent into the corner he always makes solid contact and keeps him there.
- He doesn't allow anyone to stand in front of his own net without paying a price.

Maloney concludes: "If Harold can keep a fresh outlook toward this game there's no telling how far he can go. Even the veterans have learned something from him already."

CHRIS ODDLEIFSON

Born: Brandon, Manitoba,
Sept. 7, 1950
Height: 6'1½" — Weight: 180 lbs.
Position: CENTRE

If there was ever a perfect example of how deceiving statistics can be in professional hockey, it would have to revolve around one Chris Oddleifson.

The record books show he scored three goals and kicked in with just five assists in 21 games as a Vancouver Canuck last season.

Yet the fact he agreed to a five-year contract during the summer illustrates just how much he's thought of by Phil Maloney, general manager and coach of the Canucks.

Oddleifson was involved in that controversial swap between Vancouver and Boston late into last year's schedule . . . the trade that saw Bobby Schmautz go to the Bruins for Oddleifson, leftwinger Fred O'Donnell and the NHL rights to Mike Walton.

As it turned out, O'Donnell never played a game for the Canucks. Instead, he sat out the balance of the season and jumped leagues.

But Oddleifson was quick to show on the West Coast and the short while he wore Canuck colors he established himself as a quiet team leader. His work at face-offs was incredible; he helped kill penalties; he was willing to play either wing or at centre, depending upon where he might be needed most.

Not even a fractured jaw he suffered (compliments of Atlanta's Pat Quinn) was enough to keep him on the sidelines.

"The five-year contract tells you what I think of Chris Oddleifson," Maloney says. "He's going to be a great one!"

Sh-sh-sh-sh. There's a 'sleeper' in the crowd.

Guy by the name of Paulin Bordeleau, a guy King Clancy refers to as "a great entertainer, a kid with the skating ability of Howie Morenz".

Bordeleau arrived in Vancouver one year ago amid all the fanfare of the Canucks' top two amateur selections—Dennis Ververgaert and Bob Daily.

He went about the business, meanwhile, of quietly suiting up for 68 games with the Canucks and quietly potting 11 goals, 13 assists—four points more than his older brother, J.P., was able to collect with the Chicago Black Hawks.

Skeptics suggested Bordeleau would need a year in the minors to prepare for the NHL. They suggested his 5'9", 165-pound frame couldn't stand the heavy going in his first year of pro.

And Paulin Bordeleau, a 'sleeper', proved them wrong on both counts.

Pardon Jim Wiley if he never buys a Hershey chocolate bar again as long as he lives.

Hershey's a nice little city, but . . .

Wiley spent most of last season down on the Pittsburgh Penguins' farm in Hershey and dropped by to see Penguins' general manager Jack Button prior to the June draft meetings.

"If you can't use me here in Pittsburgh," Wiley said, "then why not give me a chance to make some other NHL club?"

Button agreed, and until the Canucks' snared him prior to the expansion draft it appeared his name would be included with either the Kansas City or Washington franchises.

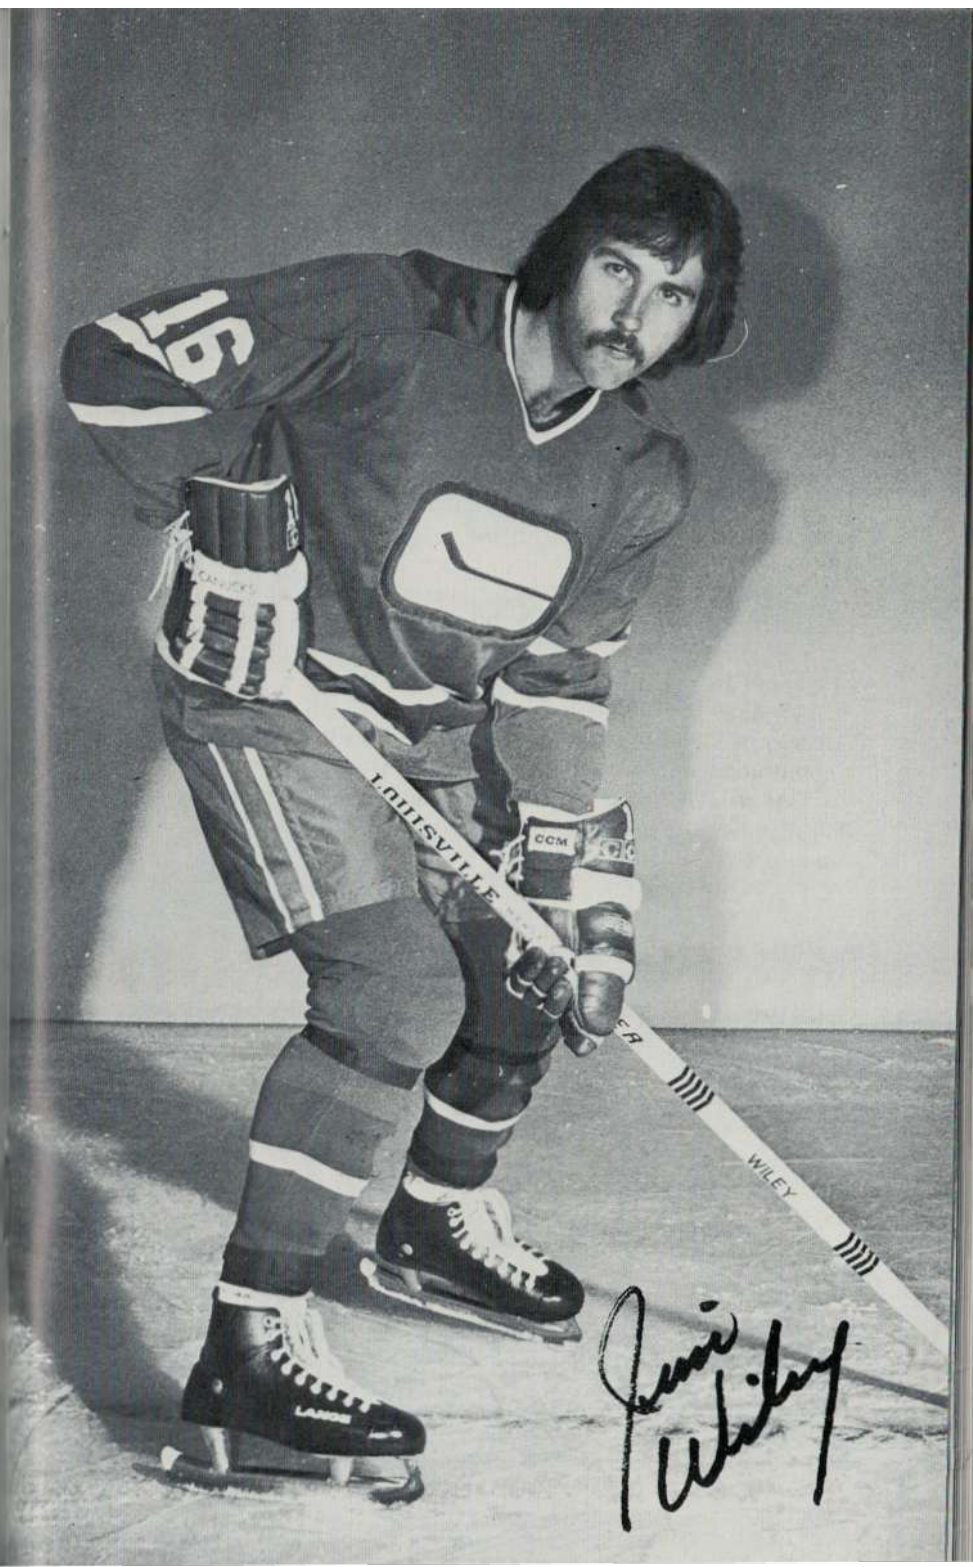

"All I want is a chance to prove myself in the NHL," Wiley said upon hearing the news that Vancouver had purchased him for the $40,000 draft price. "I'd have reported anywhere but I'm glad to remain in Canada and to be part of the Canucks' family."

With Hershey last year in American League playoffs, he led all other scorers with five goals and 11 assists in 14 games.

RON SEDLBAUER

Born: Burlington, Ontario,

Ron Sedlbauer, the Canucks' top amateur draft last May, got off to a slow start at training camp this year but picked up his pace with each pre-season game.

The big leftwinger—he's six-foot-three, 195 pounds—registered a point a game with Kitchener of the OHA last season . . . 25 goals and 29 assists in 54 games.

"I've been watching him for years," says eastern scout John O'Flaherty. "He has a good shot, he can skate and while it's always a big jump from junior right into the National League, Ron has the desire and ambition to defy the odds."

Sedlbauer actually was drafted in the second round because the Canucks had given up their first-round pick to the Montreal Canadiens the previous summer in order to nab Bob Dailey.

"Our scouts had him listed as a first-round choice, anyway," says Phil Maloney. "We were surprised he was still available when our turn came to pick."

BOBBY LALONDE

Born: Montreal, Quebec,
March 27, 1951
Height: 5'5" – Weight: 155 lbs.
Position: CENTRE

Rapid Robert Lalonde has emerged as one of the most popular players ever to don the Vancouver Canuck colors.

Last season was one of frustration, however, since he was forced to miss 42 games through various injuries. A nagging ankle fracture kept him in the press boxes around the league and this time around the speedy winger plans to get back into the swing of things by taking a more active part in the Canucks' search for a playoff berth.

Lalonde came to the Canucks along with Jocelyn Guevremont and Richard Lemieux as three of the top amateurs drafted three years ago from the Montreal Junior Canadiens.

He's doubly valuable to g.m. and coach Phil Maloney because of the fact he can play either left or right wing—always available for spot duty.

His teammates call him 'Newsy' and he's got news for you ... namely bouncing back following an unfortunate season last winter.

JOHN GOULD

Born: Alliston, Ontario, April 11, 1949
 Height: 5'11" — Weight: 185 lbs.
 Position: LEFT WING

Leftwinger John Gould opened a few eyes around the NHL two winters ago when he potted 30 goals and 42 assists in just 56 games with Cincinnati of the American League.

That outburst earned him a shot at permanent employment with the parent Buffalo Sabres and he wound up a member of the Canucks' family as part of that three-player Christmas trade last year that saw Gould and Tracy Pratt come to the West Coast in exchange for Jerry Korab.

Phil Maloney let his opinion of Gould be known at the conclusion of last season when he called him in and tore up his existing contract, offering in return a longer, more lucrative one.

"We needed help on that left side," Maloney points out, "and in Gould, we got it."

John's young brother, Larry, was a 17-goal man with the Seattle Totems in the WHL last year.

GREGG BODDY

Born: Ponoka, Alberta, March 19, 1949
Height: 6'2" — Weight: 200 lbs.
Position: DEFENCE

It could only happen in Vancouver. Gregg Boddy is a defenceman by trade so he winds up playing rightwing on the Canucks' number one checking line. What's more, the leftwinger on the line—Dave Dunn—is also a defenceman by trade. And what's more, the centre is Gerry O'Flaherty, who never played centre before in his life.

A Vancouver sportswriter nicknamed them the 'Roaring 20's' line—Boddy (No. 22); O'Flaherty (No. 23); and Dunn (No. 24).

The opposition nicknamed them a lot of other things.

Boddy actually came up through the Los Angeles Kings' chain before becoming involved in a multi-player swap that saw him wind up with the Montreal Canadiens' chain.

In May of 1971 the Canucks purchased his contract from the Habs and he's been with the club since, primarily in a utility role prior to clicking with O'Flaherty and Dunn.

"Have you ever played at centre ice before in your hockey career?" Phil Maloney asked Gerry O'Flaherty one day shortly after Maloney was named coach of the Canucks in January, 1974.

"No," was the terse reply from O'Flaherty. "But that's not to say I can't do it."

O'Flaherty's philosophy was simple: anything beats riding the bench . . . a spot he occupied regularly for most part of the first-half of the Canucks' 1973-74 schedule.

O'Flaherty got his chance and reacted by playing the finest hockey of his young pro career . . . scoring 22 goals and 20 assists on a line that was frequently asked to check the opposition's most potent trio.

O'Flaherty's goal production—35 in two seasons—is considerably higher than what was expected of him when the Canucks grabbed him from Toronto in the intra-league draft in June, 1972.

And as a centre ice man, he's just starting.

His teammates call him 'Big Red'.

Phil Maloney calls him 'my kind of guy'.

He's Dave Dunn, defenceman by trade but last year one of the truly bright spots on left wing for the Vancouver Canucks as a member of the 'Roaring 20's' line with Gerry O'Flaherty and Gregg Boddy.

Maloney coached Dunn in Seattle two years ago when he was recognized as an all-star Western League defenceman. "I used to throw him over on left wing when we'd be in trouble or playing short," Maloney says. "He never once let me down. He's got a great attitude."

'Big Red' will never beat Yvan Cournoyer in an end-to-end dash on the ice; he'll never score 50 goals; and he'll never handle the puck like a Stan Mikita.

But he will always give you maximum effort with enough ability to interest every rival g.m. in the National Hockey League.

"I was after our guys to try and land Dunn all last season," Toronto Maple Leafs' King Clancy readily admits. "He'd help any club in the league."

There seems to be this little black cloud hovering over the head of one Bryan McSheffrey.

The big rightwinger has it all . . . size, speed, a blazing shot . . . yet he's had trouble getting untracked with the Vancouver Canucks.

At one point it resulted in a trip to the Seattle Totems of the then-Western Hockey League. But he was too talented to remain in the minors, setting the league on fire with his goal-scoring prowess.

At training camp this season he reported in top shape and his mental attitude matched his physical condition.

"I've had a couple of seasons under my belt now," McSheffrey says, "and I know what I've got to do to stay in the NHL."

Back in 1972-73, the Toronto Maple Leafs were excited about a big kid back on their blueline by the name of Larry McIntyre. He had played 40 games for Toronto . . . and played well.

But then the old injury bug hit—in McIntyre's case, a shoulder problem . . . and he's been in the minors since. In May, 1973, the Canucks dealt Dunc Wilson to the Leafs in exchange for McIntyre and Murray Heatley.

While Heatley defected, McIntyre remains a strong candidate for permanent employment in the National Hockey League.

He's only 25 years old and reported to training camp this year in A-1 condition.

"It's going to take a lot of hard work to get back into the NHL," McIntyre says. "But I've never been afraid of work. I want another chance."

AROUND THE CANUCK CIRCUIT

Late flashes from the Canucks' 1974-75 training camp at Victoria — first time ever the club has trained in British Columbia:

A welcomed addition to the coaching fraternity (Seattle, Central League) was former Canuck captain Orland Kurtenbach, who signed a two-year contract. Kurt had a year remaining on his playing contract but at the age of 38, elected to launch a coaching career instead.

In another eleventh-hour move, Phil Maloney snared Larry Popein from the New York Rangers' organization and named him Western Scout. 'Pope' took an active part in helping Maloney on the ice during training camp and will be scouting both the pros and juniors throughout the coming season.

Biggest surprise of the camp was goaltender Gary Smith's medical chart. He weighed in at an incredible 217 pounds . . . incredible because he's been playing anywhere between 220 and 225 for the past 11 years.

Now on the Canucks' payroll as a full-time employee is Eastern Scout Jack MacDonald. He and John (Peanuts) O'Flaherty will work out of Toronto.

And yet another new face: Pat Dunn, the Canucks' new head trainer. Dunn worked for a year-and-a-half under Maloney with the Seattle Totems and turned down seven other offers for the Vancouver appointment.

Dunn and his right-hand man, assistant Phil Langlois, ran a flawless ship during training camp.

All of the statistical information included between the covers of this 1974-75 Canuck Yearbook was compiled by play-by-play broadcaster Jim Robson of CKNW.

We think you'll agree, he did a super job.

THE GREATEST HOCKEY NUT OF ALL BRINGS YOU GREAT HOCKEY. PLAY BY PLAY.

For great Hockey, check out Jim Robson.
He's nuts about the game. It shows.
