THE OFFICIAL MAGAZINE OF THE EDMONTON OILERS

9 KOLOSSAL KOSKINEN

After he was selected 31st overall by the New York Islanders in 2009, Mikko Koskinen's first attempt to stick in the NHL was unsuccessful. But following seven seasons of honing his goaltending craft overseas, including winning a pair of KHL championships, the towering Finn decided it was time to attempt a return to the sport's grandest stage. Koskinen has since solidified his place in the NHL and emerged as the Oilers go-to puck-stopper this season.

41 AIR FORCE GREAT ONE

The 1978-79 World Hockey Association season has just begun and the Indianapolis Racers feature an up-and-coming forward named Wayne Gretzky. However, with the team on the verge of folding, we revisit the story – as told by WHA franchise owners, Oilers alumni, Edmonton media and archived newspaper articles – about the deal and subsequent plane ride that brought the National Hockey League's all-time leading scorer to Oil Country.

53 BREAKING DOWN BARRIERS

The Oilers hosted Hockey is for Everyone Night on Feb. 19 to celebrate diversity and inclusion in the sport. The league-wide initiative uses the game of hockey to drive positive social change, foster more inclusive communities and celebrate all players, coaches, athletes and fans who are passionate about the sport, regardless of race, colour, religion, national origin, gender, disability, sexual orientation and socio-economic status.

KOLOSSAL KOSKINEN

BY JAMIE UMBACH

Two summers ago from his home in Helsinki, Mikko Koskinen decided that the upcoming season for SKA St. Petersburg would be his last in Russia, and that the mountain of the Kontinental Hockey League (KHL) had been conquered.

He'd come to similar conclusions multiple times before during his career, like he did joining the New York Islanders for his first North American stint in 2009 as a drafted rookie, returning three years later to Europe to dominate the crease in his native Finland and the KHL, or when given the chance on more than one occasion to represent his country on the international stage.

The next big step needed to be taken.

Four years between the pipes for the renowned Russian hockey club provided the Finnish giant the platform needed for him to establish himself as one of the KHL's elite goaltenders and win two Gagarin Cups, which he holds up to this day as his greatest hockey achievements.

But an abundance of ambition, and a lack of time, was pushing him back to close the book on the one chapter of his career he hadn't fully been able to finish – the National Hockey League.

"I won a few times in the KHL and felt there wasn't much more of a challenge left for me there," Koskinen said of his three-year tenure in Russia's second-largest city, about a four-and-a-half-hour drive from his hometown of Vantaa just north of the Finnish capital.

"I want to challenge myself as a goalie every day, and I felt it was the right time to come over and show to myself that I can do even better."

Koskinen, who'd always elect to have his actions in goal speak far louder than his few words, finished his final year for SKA with poise, posting a commanding 1.57 goals-against average and a .937 save percentage during the 2017-18 KHL regular season while catching the eye of a handful of North American clubs in the process.

He also made five appearances for the blue and white of Finland at the 2018 Winter Olympics in PyeongChang that year, climbing another step up the ladder after already earning two silver medals at the IIHF World Hockey Championship in 2014 and 2016.

Through rigorous KHL training camps in Siberia and St. Petersburg, international tournaments, and a long-awaited return to the NHL with the Edmonton Oilers, Koskinen maintains the strong sense of resolve he uses to block out white noise when he steps onto the ice for another 60 minutes in the blue paint.

"This is my last opportunity for me to come back here and prove myself," he said. "That's what I'm trying to do every day."

Koskinen maintains an image of mystery to the many fans and media pundits alike who poke and prod at the motivations of the netminder, whose physical projection more than makes up for his lack in commentary.

The 30-year-old has no reservations about his position on the ice, in the Oilers dressing room or as a netminder making what could be his final foray into the ranks of the hockey hierarchy.

If he did, he wouldn't be the one to tell you.

"Yeah, it's better that way," Koskinen said with a smirk of his silent and independent approach. "I can do my own thing and keep it like that."

Arriving in Edmonton with plenty of mystery surrounding him, 'Mikko Koskinen' might have been the most-searched name in Oil Country on April 1, 2018.

Signing a one-year contract worth $2.5 million with the Oilers last spring led many fans down the rabbit hole of countless HockeyDB, Elite Prospects and Wikipedia pages, where you'd learn of a hulking Finnish goaltender who put up powerful numbers in Europe across Finland and Russia, and internationally after suiting up for only four NHL games.

It should've been expected that a goalie who wears number 19, and already split the mantle of league's tallest goaltender with Dallas Stars netminder Ben Bishop at a staggering 6-foot-7, would garner the attention that he did.

But as a man of minimal conversation, he'd rather leave the rest up to the imagination of fans, media, and even his teammates.

"He seems pretty quiet," Leon Draisaitl stated simply of the man known as Kossu or Kolmen metrinen Koskinen (three-metre Koskinen) in his home country. "He has some good stories about Russia."

Koskinen played 51 games over three years in the ECHL, AHL and NHL as part of the Islanders' farm system from 2009-12, highlighted by four starts with the big club during the 2010-11 NHL season that yielded a 4.33 goals-against average and .873 save percentage.

Behind on the depth chart on Long Island, a loan and eventual permanent move back to the Finnish Elite League with KalPa, and one season in the Helsinki capital region with the now-defunct Espoo Blues, led the netminder to Sibir Novosibirsk of the KHL in Siberia – an area of southwest Russia that, for Edmontonians, bitterly compares to central Alberta with its warm summers and well-below freezing winters.

He spent another half-season in Novosibirsk and was traded to the prestigious SKA St. Petersburg, earning 2014-15 honours as the KHL's best goaltender before manning their net for three more seasons and winning two league titles alongside NHL hallmarks like Artemi Panarin, Ilya Kovalchuk and Pavel Datsyuk.

"It was a great thing to be around great players and legendary Russian players," Koskinen said. "Great coaches too, and overall the organization was great. Then it made it even better that we had success there, so it was a fun four years there."

Entertaining multiple offers to come back to the NHL, Koskinen came highly recommended to the Oilers management staff by European scout Matti Virmanen, and even shared an agent with fellow Finn and now-teammate Jesse Puljujarvi.

He visited Edmonton with his wife Karolina and seven-month-old son Lukas before signing a contract, and it was an easy transition.

"We visited the city a few weeks earlier and really liked the city," Koskinen said. "It compares a lot for us to Helsinki and feels comfortable for us."

The visit also gave the netminder and Oilers Goaltending Coach Dustin Schwartz the opportunity to connect one-on-one and set goals early with training camp more than three months away.

"The initial conversations were about getting to know each other more than anything," said Schwartz, a former goaltender for the Red Deer Rebels and the University of Alberta Golden Bears. "Building a bit of a relationship and talking a little bit about where his game was, because obviously there's a transition period from the European game.

"We talked a lot about why his game was successful overseas and what he could bring with him, along with some adjustments that we might have to consider once he got over to North America and started playing in the NHL."

A surprise phone call from legend Jari Kurri the night he and his wife arrived in Edmonton led to the two Finns connecting later in person when Kurri was in the city, giving Koskinen plenty of background on the club, its history, and what could be possible for him as an Oiler.

"I think that eased his mind knowing there was that Finnish connection and that he had a tonne of success as an athlete in this city."

It was a cathartic moment for members of the Edmonton media during Oilers training camp.

After delivering a number of short, to-the-point answers during a post-practice interview that would soon become his trademark, a question on comparisons between NHL and KHL training camps raised microphones and recorders a little higher and closer to the oncoming voice of the giant netminder.

"It's night and day," Koskinen answered. "You can't compare these camps to what I've been through these last five years. Here you can stay three hours a day at the rink, but there you can do three practices in a day."

It takes a different kind of player to survive and thrive in the KHL.

"We always started the day around 7am with no breakfast," Koskinen later expanded. "Straight to running for about 45 minutes then some jumps and stuff like that. There would be breakfast and a half-hour rest, then our first skate. After that more gym and a little bit more rest, then a second practice, rest, and a third practice in the evening for one hour. Then an hour-and-a-half in the gym after that."

"They were long days. It was four days of that, then one rest day, then four more days on again. It took months, so it's quite long."

To bookend the misery at the end of the season, teams who failed to make the playoffs or were eliminated early often skated until the official end of the KHL calendar. But Koskinen and SKA St. Petersburg didn't have to endure that often.

"We always played well, so we didn't have to do that," Koskinen said. "The other teams there are usually practicing even if they're out, so they keep practicing after the end of their season then they go home for the summer break."

Just as he left no expectation for the media after arriving in Edmonton, only a player with a different mental make-up like Koskinen would stamp out any sense of expectation from the get-go.

"I didn't have any expectations," said Koskinen, who was originally slated to step into the back-up role behind Cam Talbot from the onset. "I didn't give myself any expectations because every time you start with high expectations and something goes wrong, then you're going to feel bad."

"If I do my best every day, I should be fine. I don't have to worry about that."

The netminders had already been introduced to one another in Moscow during the gold-medal game of the World Championship in 2016, where Koskinen was crowned the tournament's best goaltender.

"I think we won 2-0, but we might have outshot them 33-16," said Talbot, who has since been traded to the Philadelphia Flyers. "He stood on his head and almost stole the game. That was really the only game I'd ever seen him play, but he was very impressive."

"I knew he was a big guy that would take up a lot of the net, but then once he got here you realize how big he actually is. He's very competitive and a good teammate as well."

Beginning his tenure as an Oiler during pre-season with his first taste of the Battle of Alberta against the Calgary Flames, 23 seconds was all it took for the first puck to get past before another two snuck through in the opening 20 minutes for not the most ideal of starts.

Re-adapting to the NHL pace and its smaller ice provided an early test to Koskinen's resolve as he allowed 10 goals on 69 shots with an .855 save percentage in 162:35 of total pre-season action.

It was always going to be a long-term play.

Koskinen continued to take to the ice early with Schwartz every practice, following a routine centred around crease movements and quick shots that has remained consistent since the two met earlier in the year.

"It's set up for a specific reason," Schwartz said. "They're different types of movements that present themselves during a game, and then we build on it and add layers to it where there's challenges or areas where we want to continue to stay sharp in."

If Schwartz wasn't serving as the shooter, the role was often filled by his countryman Puljujarvi. The Finns occupy adjacent stalls next to one another in the Oilers locker room and are regularly found conversing in their native tongue.

"Jesse has been around for a few years and I'm new to the NHL and don't know all the things going on, so I'm asking him how it's going and I try to help my best also," Koskinen said. "It's good to have someone to talk to. The nature of the language always makes things easier."

For Puljujarvi, Koskinen and his wife Karolina provide a sense of familiarity in their home away from home.

"We are good friends," Puljujarvi said. "We talk every day here and we hang out sometimes the day of games. It's pretty nice to be able to speak Finnish sometimes here too for jokes and stuff like that. Some days I visit their home and they'll make dinner for me."

Despite being at different points in their careers and following different paths, the two help one another through the process.

"I think Mikko is such a good leader in his own quiet way, I think he's well-respected by his teammates, and Jesse is a young guy who is learning the ropes and Mikko has kind of taken him under his wing," Schwartz added. "With Mikko having a family here, it's a good thing for Jesse to have that stability that gives him some familiarity and comfort knowing Mikko can speak his language and understand him."

"I think that's been a really good relationship for both of them transitioning, but probably even more so for Jesse."

After starting the regular season on the bench for eight straight games behind Talbot and having not played an NHL game since February 13, 2011, Koskinen earned a huge victory on the road in his Oilers debut on October 27 in a 5-3 road decision over the Nashville Predators, breaking a 13-game hoodoo for the Oilers against the club.

He introduced himself to the applause of Rogers Place five days later in a 4-0 blanking of the Chicago Blackhawks, making 40 saves for his first career NHL shutout.

"The fans are rising, and they're rising for the Finn, Mikko Koskinen," said Oilers Sportsnet play-by-play voice Kevin Quinn as the clock ran down.

It would not be the last time Koskinen would have the home crowd on its feet.

Koskinen shut out the Dallas Stars 1-0 on November 27, before shutting out the Flames 10 days later on December 9 – all part of a seven-game win streak on home ice.

Koskinen, astute in his approach, could once again only downplay to the media the idea of three shutouts and a 9-3-0 record to begin his return to the NHL.

"I don't really care about the numbers," Koskinen said. "The only thing I care for is the wins, because we need to win the games here if we're going to be a successful team and win something big at the end of the year. It doesn't matter if it's 6-5 or 1-0, a win is a win and that's why we're here."

Even when results have slipped, Koskinen sticks to the game plan.

Head Coach Ken Hitchcock, who consulted his former Dallas defenceman and Koskinen's St. Petersburg coach Sergei Zubov after taking the helm on November 20 to find out exactly what kind of goaltender he had in the Finn, lauds a player like Mikko who can coach himself through the ups and downs.

"He's been such an underdog his whole life," Hitchcock said.

"He's had to work for everything and he's not afraid of doing that stuff. He bounces back fine, but this is a different league than the KHL is, so he's having to stop pucks and learn on the fly here.

"I love his attitude. I love the way he works and I love the way he looks at things. He's very analytical and he's not afraid to look in the mirror, and I think quite frankly that's what is going to make him a really good NHL goalie."

It's been a grand start to life back in the NHL for Mikko Koskinen.

From the ECHL, to Europe, to being back in North America with the Oilers, it's the journey through the ranks that pushes the colossal crease protector to grow as a goaltender and take to the ice before his teammates every practice to continue the process.

"His work ethic is incredible," Schwartz said of his netminder. "Elite character, he's a hard worker, he understands his position well and is very coachable. He's put a lot of time into making those adjustments to his game, and the biggest thing is he puts in the work and the repetition. It really starts to become what his game is and what his game is all about.

"It's taken some time and the good part about him is he continues to look and try and find ways to be better than he already is. That's the sign of a real pro."

Until he's reached the pinnacle of puck protection, Koskinen will continue to keep his cards close to his chest in the media, downplaying his individual accomplishments for the benefit of his team.

It's all an on-going personal evaluation of himself to prove he's not the same goalie who couldn't find a groove in the NHL a decade ago.

"I was a kid when I came over," Koskinen said. "My mentality was not there yet. I'm a different person and a different goalie than I was all those years ago."

The netminder that he's evolved into this season has been rewarded for his efforts as the Oilers signed Koskinen to a three-year contract extension in late January. ♦

OIL

I am so excited to be back with the @EdmontonOilers. I have so many great memories from my first time here and can't wait to create more. The community and fan base has always been great to my family and it feels like we are coming home. #LetsGoOilers

It was an emotional homecoming for player and fans alike when it was announced that former Oilers forward and favourite Sam Gagner would be making his Oil Country return when the club acquired him from the Vancouver Canucks on February 16. Edmonton's sixth-overall pick from the 2007 NHL Draft departed the team via trade in 2014 after 481 games played, and did not hesitate to share his excitement when it was announced he would be back in orange and blue, looking to add to that total. Oilers fans were equally as enthused with the move and took to social media to immediately welcome him back into the fold.

MUST LOVE DOGS

BY CAIT MACPHAIL

In 2015, a newspaper in the United Kingdom conducted a poll seeking to find out what it is that people miss most when they are on vacation or away from home for extended periods.

The smattering of top responses is nothing unexpected, with 55% saying their own bed makes the list. Not surprising is the 22% saying they miss their close family, while maybe somewhat less expected is 43% saying their favourite TV show is something they pine for while away from home.

Coming in on top, though, with more responders saying this made their list than those who included their bed, family or friends probably won't shock most – their pets.

67% of the thousands polled said they miss the companionship of their animals while away from home.

Thus, in the nomadic nature that defines the lives of most professional athletes, there might not be much that can turn a house in a new city into a home more than a pet. And for Oilers forward Tobi Rieder and his girlfriend Laura Koehler, it's dogs specifically.

After signing a one-year deal as a free agent with the Oilers last July, the next step for Rieder was heading to Edmonton from Germany ahead of training camp. Not far behind him was his long-time girlfriend – whom he first met during his junior days with the Kitchener Rangers of the OHL – who was joining him for their next adventure.

The travel and relocation can be chaotic for the vast majority of NHLers that aren't privileged to the six- or seven-year deals that allow a long-term commitment to one place. Sudden trades, professional try-out opportunities or free-agent signings with a new team can mean you don't know where you'll be in a month, or even a week. A house or apartment in a brand new city may not automatically feel like home when you fill it with stuff. Being an NHL vet of more than 300 games in two different cities, and one more at the AHL level, over the previous six seasons, Rieder and his partner Koehler more or less knew the drill.

New city, new team and new surroundings. What better way to make that new house feel like a home than with the one thing people miss most when they are away? For Rieder and Koehler, that's dogs. More specifically, foster dogs.

"Tobi was in Edmonton maybe a week before me. I flew in on a Wednesday, did the online application when I was on the plane, we had a home visit on the Thursday and had a dog by Saturday," said Koehler. "We didn't even know where the closest grocery store was, but we had a dog."

In keeping with a tradition the pair had started back when Rieder played parts of five seasons with the Arizona Coyotes from 2014-2018, Koehler was already researching which local animal rescue they could get involved with in Edmonton before she even knew how to get to their house.

With the nomadic nature of a professional hockey player, their heavy travel schedule and then more movement in the summer when they often head to off-season homes, the couple knew having a dog of their own just didn't make sense for them. So they figured out a way to have the best of both worlds. That's where Zoe's Animal Rescue, a local organization in Edmonton, came into play.

"It's a compromise we had to make because having a dog in the household was never a question. It was just something we had to get done and it's sort of a two-birds-with-one-stone situation," said Koehler.

"We both had dogs growing up and there was just something so natural about having one in the house that it wasn't something we were just willing to give up even with our unique schedules," added Rieder.

Those "two birds" referred to not only getting to have a dog in the home, but often a dog in desperate need of some rehabilitation, training, medication and, of course, love and attention.

Zoe's Animal Rescue is a completely volunteer-run and shelter-less organization, meaning they don't have one physical facility to hold all adoptable pets; rather, they rely on the time and effort of dozens of volunteers to often pick up, rehabilitate and facilitate the adoption process. This includes individuals needed to open their home to animals until they are ready to go to their "forever" homes.

"It's such a great way to have a dog without a long-term commitment. It's an easier way to go about it and you're able to help them and be an animal rescue advocate," said Koehler.

"This is a great option and we love doing it," added Rieder.

Two successful foster projects in Arizona and then four more since they've been in Edmonton mean they've been able to soak up the love of six different dogs (and counting) while also getting to be a part of the process in making sure they go to the best home possible.

"Zoe's is so supportive throughout the whole process. They supply the proper medication, food and they have a 24-hour contact line if we need any help or have any questions," said Koehler.

When NHL players' partners join them in new cities, there's often already a built-in support network of other wives and girlfriends that can make the transition easier. Friendships are formed over common bonds, similar experiences and shared interests. So when Rieder and Koehler moved in next door to Oilers defenceman Andrej Sekera and his wife Katarina, some of those similar interests were quite apparent, as they were soon ripping around in the yard next door.

"The Sekeras saw dogs in the backyard one day, and with them being from Europe as well, they were like 'how do you guys do this?'," said Rieder.

The Sekeras had a Zoe's foster dog the next week.

Puppy love is clearly contagious, because not long after that, after a visit at Rieder's place, Oilers forward Zack Kassian and his wife Cassandra were back on the foster train again as well, having done it back when Kassian was playing in Vancouver.

"We had thought about it since we'd been in Edmonton, so it helped to have Tobi and Laura kind of set us up with it," said Kassian. "We all went and checked things out, liked the situation with Zoe's and got to start fostering again."

On top of referencing the crazy road schedule that makes any kind of consistency at home more difficult, Kassian talked about how nice fostering can be for the partner who stays behind while the team is on the road, often in a city they're not familiar with.

"It gave Cassandra, my wife, a side project and some companionship while the team is on the road."

He's quick to bring up, though, perhaps the one downfall any dog lover might find in fostering.

"It's tough for her, she falls in love. She cries every time we have to give one up," the 6-foot-2, 211-pound NHL power forward smiles, juxtaposed, still in his post-workout Oilers gear, talking enthusiastically about tiny, adorable puppies.

"Zoe's has such a good foster program. I wish we would have found them earlier. I just enjoy dogs. Growing up, you don't really realize that dogs have different personalities. You learn that through fostering."

It becomes clear that Kassian is another of many whose innate love of dogs doubles as a built-in stress-reliever.

"I've always liked dogs," he said "When you get away from the rink, it's fun to get your mind off hockey and just play with them. You come home and there might be a poop in the living room because they're still learning, but they're so jacked to see you."

The six-month-old retriever-cross foster puppy might not know that you scored the OT winner with six seconds left, but it sure isn't going to wag its tail any less if you hit the post on a two-on-one.

"They're so forgivable," said Rieder.

"We were so happy to get them all hooked on it," said Koehler of getting other Oilers and their partners involved with Zoe's.

Their current foster puppy yelps in the background.

The stories behind many rescue dogs and their journey are often not for the faint of heart. And as one of the co-directors of Zoe's Animal Rescue, Kath Olsther, tells the story of Rieder and Koehler's current foster puppy, you learn his story is no exception.

After a particularly brutal run-in with a porcupine, the gorgeous light brown and mild-mannered pit-bull mix found himself with a face full of quills and soon a nasty infection. Zoe's was able to intervene and bring the ailing dog to their partnered vet, Lakeside Veterinary Clinic in Sherwood Park, where they started the brutal but necessary process of pulling out the quills. And this pup, Connor, was full of them.

With the painkillers providing some relief and the painstaking process of removing quills mostly over, Olsther, who had brought him there and stayed to help, was not 10 minutes from the clinic when Connor coded.

"He was technically dead for 20 minutes after I left while they feverishly tried to get him back and keep him back," said Olsther

She details and praises the work of the vets and vet techs to revive the sick pup.

"Connor came back, which sort of shocked all of us, and he didn't just come back, he came back and he thrived."

Once he was ready to be fostered, Rieder and Koehler were ready for their next puppy project.

"Connor was young and he was just so willing to be helped. He wasn't fearful, he wasn't trying to snap or bite when he could. It was sort of, 'ok, I'll do my best' and once we got some of the painkiller in, we got a couple tail wags, even though he was still full of quills. We could still see that spark of joy in his eyes," said Olsther. "He is the poster boy of the kind of things we deal with."

Both Olsther, Rieder and Koehler describe this miracle dog in the same way.

Zoe's gives all their dogs last names to differentiate them from the many that come through their organization.

This particular pup was named Connor before he was even brought in, but was given the official title of Connor Hopeful upon coming under the rescue's care. A fitting surname, to be sure.

Connor Hopeful barks in the background of Rieder and Koehler's phone interview. He had just gotten into the trash minutes before, but as any dog foster family will tell you, that's all part of the process.

"How could you stay mad at this face?" said Koehler.

Rieder and Koehler, too, understand having to say goodbye to a foster pup isn't always easy, but necessary. They run through some of the dogs they've seen go to loving homes.

"It doesn't get any easier, by any means, but if Odie didn't get adopted, we wouldn't have had Rosie. If Rosie didn't get adopted, we wouldn't have had Darcy and if Darcy doesn't find a home we wouldn't have had Max," said Koehler. "Each one takes a little part of you, but the next one kind of fills that back up."

"We were just talking about it," said Rieder. "If we had a more stable life, we would probably keep every single one of the dogs. It is tough, but we see the big picture and we're so happy to see them go to their forever home." 🍀

GAME PREVIEW

EDMONTON OILERS vs NEW JERSEY DEVILS

WEDNESDAY | MARCH 13 | 2019 | ROGERS PLACE

THE OILERS WILL LOOK TO SECURE THREE VICTORIES IN FOUR GAMES DURING THEIR HOMESTAND AS THEY HOST THE NEW JERSEY DEVILS TONIGHT AT ROGERS PLACE. Edmonton opened the four-game stand last Thursday with a 3-2 win over the Vancouver Canucks, dropped a 3-2 decision to the Toronto Maple Leafs on Saturday and defeated the New York Rangers on Monday by a margin of – you guessed it – 3-2, though this one was decided in overtime. The Devils, meanwhile, are playing their fourth of six consecutive games on the road, squaring off with the Flames in Calgary last night before heading north to Edmonton. Prior to last night's game, they hadn't won since Feb. 25 against the Montreal Canadiens. The Oilers and Devils opened the 2018-19 regular season against one another with the NHL Global Series in Gothenburg, Sweden on Oct. 6, as New Jersey claimed a 5-2 decision. Kyle Palmieri and Travis Zajac each scored twice for the Devils, while Milan Lucic and Leon Draisaitl tallied for Edmonton.

PLAYERS TO WATCH

ZACK KASSIAN has been a force to be reckoned with for the Oilers lately, stringing together four consecutive games with a goal between Feb. 28 and March 7, recording an assist on Matt Benning's tally against the New York Rangers on Monday, and injecting his usual physical presence into the game. The 28-year-old forward is up to 12 goals and 21 points in 66 games this season, with 18 of those points coming after the calendar flipped to 2019. Kassian needs three more goals and nine more points to set career highs in each of those categories. He had 14 goals and 29 points with the Vancouver Canucks in 2013-14. Kassian and his wife Cassandra also welcomed baby Ellery to the world on Sunday.

KYLE PALMIERI has been a consistent offensive presence this season on a Devils squad that has been decimated by injuries to their top forwards. The 28-year-old winger opened the season with two goals against Edmonton in the NHL Global Series game in Sweden and stayed hot to start the year with seven goals in his first four games. Palmieri had 26 goals and 48 points in 65 games prior to last night's matchup against the Calgary Flames, and he made his first-ever NHL All-Star appearance in January as a replacement for teammate Taylor Hall, who was unable to attend due to injury. He needs five more goals and 10 more points to surpass the career highs he set in his first year with the Devils in 2015-16.

AIR FORCE GREAT ONE

BY PAUL GAZZOLA

Indianapolis Racers owner and Oilers part-owner Nelson Skalbania signed unproven 17-year-old forward Wayne Gretzky to a personal service contract in the summer of 1978, making Gretzky an Indianapolis Racer for the upcoming '78-79 World Hockey Association season.

Less than 10 games into Gretzky's career with the Racers, the team was on the verge of folding, causing Skalbania to sell the teenager and other Indianapolis Racers skaters. For Skalbania, Gretzky's destination was going to be either the WHA's Winnipeg Jets or the Edmonton Oilers.

Here's the story, as told by WHA franchise owners, Oilers alumni, Edmonton media and archived articles about the deal and flight that brought the National Hockey League's greatest player to the Edmonton Oilers.

INDIANAPOLIS, 1978

Wayne Gretzky (Forward, Edmonton Oilers): Nelson had signed me in June of '78, I guess it was. He really didn't know a lot about hockey but that was OK. He was a businessman.

Jim Matheson (Sports Reporter, Edmonton Journal): Skalbania had phoned me in June and said to me he was going to sign Gretzky. That was when owners actually talked to the media.

Gretzky: He was really heavily involved in trying to grow the game and make the WHA as good as you could. So, he signed this 17-year-old-kid.

Matheson: Rod Phillips was over, we were having dinner and Skalbania phoned me and asked, "Do you know anything about Gretzky?"

And I said, "I've read stuff, I've never seen him play."

He said, "Oh, I'm going to sign him."

Gretzky: Part of the problem was that I was really somewhat of an unknown. At that point in time, Indianapolis wasn't, by any means, a great hockey city. Although, it was a good sports city. He thought this 17-year-old kid could sort of turn that around and make an impact in the community.

Matheson: I remember watching Gretzky play in Indianapolis and they had him with a couple sluggers to look after him. So, he really didn't do a whole lot.

Gretzky scored three goals and six points in eight career games with the Racers.

Eddie Mio (Goaltender, Edmonton Oilers): Remember, no one knew what Wayne was going to be in the pros. He was a hell of a junior player but he left at 17.

Gretzky: After about the fifth game, he (Skalbania) came and met with me, and said he was going to trade me. It wasn't the right situation or the right scenario.

Nelson Skalbania (Former owner, Indianapolis Racers): At that time, Indianapolis was struggling badly. I think we had 2,000 season-ticket (holders). After announcing Gretzky, relatively unknown at the time in Indianapolis, the season tickets roared from 2,000 to 2,100. So, I knew I was in trouble.

Michael Gobuty (Former Part-Owner, WHA's Winnipeg Jets): I'm at home. I get a phone call. (Skalbania) says, "Michael, I'm folding. It'll be my last game in Indianapolis. Why don't you take Wayne?"

Matheson: The whole (WHA) league was that way. Anything went in that league. The owners got along well enough to say, 'I think this player on our team would be more beneficial in your market. Nobody's going to watch this guy, so, let's get him somewhere else.'

That's how Gretzky ended up in Edmonton.

Skalbania: I called up Michael Gobuty and said, "I'm going to fold the team. If you want Gretzky, I promised him to you first. You can have Gretzky."

I was always going (to offer Gretzky to) Winnipeg because they had the first right. It was a verbal handshake.

Gretzky: Nelson was really upfront with me and couldn't have been nicer about it. In a lot of ways, he felt bad but he thought it was the right thing for me, the right thing for the team and for him.

Gobuty: We did crazy things (in the WHA). If we needed a trade, we'd say, "I need your guy, you need my guy," and the trade was done. No money, nothing. Just friendship. We knew nothing about hockey, but we had camaraderie like you would not believe.

Gretzky: There was about a four- or five-day period and we played a game in Winnipeg while I was with Indy. After the game, Bobby Hull grabbed me and took me to dinner. He was really trying hard with Gobuty to get me to go to Winnipeg. He told Nelson to move me to Winnipeg. He wanted me to play with him and felt very confident that I could step in and be a centreman at 17.

Obviously, when Bobby Hull tells you something, your eyes light up. I was intrigued about playing with Bobby Hull.

Gobuty: Bobby said that if the opportunity arose that we should take Wayne Gretzky. He was very important to the team. Bobby made the Winnipeg Jets and Bobby made the WHA. There's no Bobby Hull, there's no WHA.

My GM at the time was one of the top two or three in the business, Rudy Pilous. He'd won Stanley Cups and everything. "No, Gretzky's too skinny," he said. "He's too light. They'll kill him."

Gretzky: The reality was the owner (Gobuty) and their captain (Hull) wanted me to go there but their general manager (Pilous) wasn't certain that I could play in professional leagues, so he convinced them to stay out of it. Consequently, Winnipeg was off of taken off the table.

Skalbania: I flew to Winnipeg, landed at the airport, and Gobuty brings his GM (who) says, "Are you crazy paying that kid those kinds of dollars?"

Gobuty: Nelson was a backgammon expert. And my wife was a backgammon expert. I was just an average player. And he says, "Let's play backgammon for Wayne."

"Are you crazy?" I said. "No, no, I can't do that. It's impossible."

Nelson slept at my house, and the next day he said, "What are you going to do (about acquiring Gretzky)?"

"Nelson, my partners say no," I said. "Rudy Pilous says no."

Biggest mistake. Huge mistake. Because, as you know, Wayne was the best. And I didn't do it.

Mio: It could have been completely different had he gone to Winnipeg. We ended up losing the Avco Final, believe it or not, to Winnipeg. So, that's a bit of history, too.

Ironic Wayne doesn't go to Winnipeg but Winnipeg beats Edmonton for the Avco Cup - and the last Avco. Now, that would have been nice to put on Wayne's resume. Winning the last Avco Cup and then doing what he did in Edmonton, for the NHL, and for the game of hockey.

Gretzky: Nelson said to me, "Where would you like to go, Winnipeg or Edmonton?"

It was Gus Badali (Gretzky's agent at the time) who actually told me to go to Edmonton because Edmonton had a better chance of getting into the NHL in his mind because they had a newer arena, a bigger arena than Winnipeg had, and he thought that Edmonton had a better opportunity than anybody at some point in time to get into the National Hockey League.

So, I told him "Edmonton" and I guess the rest is pretty much history.

Matheson: When he (Gretzky) came to Edmonton, nobody was that surprised because Skalbania owned two teams. That seemed to be the natural spot for him to go. He was the part-owner here (in Edmonton) with Pocklington and the full owner in Indianapolis.

Pocklington (Former Owner, Edmonton Oilers): The whole thing took about five minutes on the phone to finish off. I paid $325,000 to get the players and another $500,000 as part of a prior arrangement with Nelson that he'd get paid off should Oilers ever make it into the NHL.

Gretzky: I've heard a thousand stories (about the deal). I've never really asked one of them (Skalbania or Pocklington) what transpired or what happened. I heard everything from backgammon games, to paintings, to apartment buildings, to whatever.

NOVEMBER 2, 1978

After an Indianapolis Racers practice concluded, Gretzky, Mio and Peter Driscoll had been told they were being sold. The three were directed to pack their suitcases and head straight to the airport, although it was still a mystery as to where they would be going - Edmonton or Winnipeg.

The players were to board a private Learjet and head to Minneapolis, figuring they would know their final destination by the time they got there. There were issues, however, as not only did they not have a clue where they would end up, but someone also had to pay for the expensive private flight.

IF THERE WAS EVER a move that had "NHL" or "hockey" written all over it, this is it. Consider one thing about the $525,000 deal which brings 17-year-old sensation Wayne Gretzky, Peter Driscoll and Eddie Mio to the Edmonton Oilers and Quebec owner Peter Pocklington of a half million-dollar before to Nelson Skalbania - "The Oilers get the best deal."

Before the deal was made, the Oilers needed an average crowd of about 11,000 to break even last year. Last night general manager Larry Gordon recorded there is no way the Oilers, even with the help of the new players, would break even.

"It means the Oilers are financially positive they'll be in the NHL next year and intend to have some sort of team to take with them."

"We're going to have a success here and we're going to have it soon," said owner Pocklington in a prepared statement. "I promised we would do everything we could to build a winning hockey team in Edmonton. I hope this makes it clear that we're keeping our word."

I never thought I'd see the Peter Pocklington day when I'd be writing this, because Peter Pocklington came out of the gate as an owner at a time when owner Charles O. Finley. Given a choice of which man would own the Cleveland Indians this year, I think it's safe to say Skalbania would have won by a landslide.

But today, who is the Charlie Finley? Skalbania is doing the same thing Finley did in Oakland with the A's when he sold everything to get into the league when I'd be writing.

Beyond the Racers' demand refunds on your season tickets. Tell the club they might as well fold today as tomorrow because staying, after all, is to label the 1,000 to hockey fans as die-hard, fanatics.

Puck won't be in Indianapolis today. You will send Gretzky, often called "the next Bobby Orr," and you can go with him for how many games? Driscoll and Mio were the two most popular, and probably the two best players on the Racers' roster.

The line they're feeding the fans today in Indy is the kind of papers have been accustomed to keep you hooked alive in Indianapolis. I disagree with their definition of the word alive.

SKALBANIA is obviously playing it strictly for the Gretzky is now an Oiler!

By JIM MATHESON

Five months ago, Wayne Gretzky stepped off at the Indianapolis Airport under the wing of Indianapolis Racers plane piloted by Nelson Skalbania.

Hastily so Skalbania could sell the world - and all the NHL people gathered at their annual summer convention in Montreal - he'd just made the 17-year-old Oiler an instant millionaire.

In a classic case of deja vu, the kid they call "Bretz" made it back to the same airport Thursday night, this time as a member of the World Hockey Association's Edmonton Oilers.

"Maybe Nelson should have left me in Indy," chuckled Gretzky, a little shocked at the news that he and Racers team-mates - goalie Ed Mio and left winger Peter Driscoll - had been sold to Oilers by Skalbania for $525,000.

"I signed (for $1.25 million) just before his (Gretzky's) plane landed here this summer... but I didn't expect to be playing in Edmonton."

The most noted under-age junior of the '70s will be in the lineup tonight, however, when Oilers play Winnipeg Jets at the Coliseum. Oiler owner Peter Pocklington pointed out the young Wednesday, agreeing to take over Gretzky's ownership personal services contract, a three-year, $7.5 deal with Driscoll which earns him $300,000 a year and Mio's services for $200,000.

"The whole thing took about five minutes on the phone as far as I'm concerned," bragged Pocklington, before hanging up a glass for a big-money business deal in Toronto. "I paid $325,000 to get the players and another $500,000 as part of a prior arrangement with Nelson that he'd get paid off should the Oilers ever make it into the NHL." Skalbania is a former co-owner of the Oilers.

"Nelson wanted the money right away to handle the expected loss of $1 million this season on the Racers' operations," said Pocklington. "So, I gave him the other payment right now... rather than wait to sell owner Skalbania a summer home."

John Haglin, to Quebec with it.

But in the extreme forward flight.

At Patrik's Water Hauling Ltd., our mission is to provide fluid hauling services to our clients in a safe, efficient and responsible manner. As a leader in fluid transportation, we are committed to team relationships and protecting our resources for the future.

Mio: I remember probably everything about that day.

First of all, we started off at practice and after practice, we were told to go home and pack some clothes, make sure we got our equipment and that we were being sold. We didn't know quite where we were going. It was between Winnipeg and Edmonton but be at the airport by 2:00 O'clock.

So, when we got to the airport with all our stuff, they still had not known where we were going and we waited around and waited around. Finally, there was a decision made to fly as far as Minneapolis, and they should know by then.

We loaded the plane up, it was pretty much filled up because it was a small Learjet. Private. They wanted us there as quick as we could.

Gretzky: It was like a Learjet 35 or 25. I'm not sure exactly. I just remember I was really excited about the opportunity about going to Edmonton.

Mio: As soon as we took off, the pilot opened the door and kind of asked who was paying for the flight. Everybody looked around. Wayne's making the most between me and Peter but we know he doesn't have any bank account, credit card or whatever. Somebody is in control of his money.

Mio and Gretzky had formed a friendship in Indianapolis, with Gretzky describing Mio as an older brother. The former Oilers keeper was later Gretzky's best man at his wedding.

Gretzky: Eddie sort of looked out for me like a big brother. I was 17 years old and not only away from home but in a new country.

Mio: The decision had to be made, so I asked the pilot if he took credit card. The pilot said, "Yes" and he had one of those old swipers on the plane. He swiped it. Gave it back to me for me to sign and my jaw dropped open looking at the price.

Gretzky: All I remember was the pilot saying, "Who's paying for this?"

And Eddie said, "I got a credit card but it's got a $500 limit." The pilot said, "OK, I'll take it."

Mio: Peter Driscoll was sitting beside me and kind of said, "Well, what's the matter?"

I said, "Well, do you think they'll check the card?"

Peter said, "I don't know, why?"

I said, "Well, it's a $500 Canadian limit from Toronto Dominion." And the flight was over, I can't really recall but anywhere from $8,000 to $10,000 dollars. And that's not even knowing where we were going.

Gretzky: Fortunately, guys like Eddie, Peter and a few other guys on the team treated me extremely well and took care of me.

Mio: Long story short, not only were we panicking about where we were going, I was wondering if they were going to put the purchase through and it would have been declined right away because we said to him, "We don't know who's going to pay for it, we don't know where we were going."

He said, "If somebody doesn't pay for it, we're going to turn around and land back in Indianapolis."

That's when I made the decision and forced the credit card on him. Thankfully, he didn't check it.

Gretzky: We had to make a stop in Minnesota. At that point in time, we still weren't sure if we were going to Winnipeg or Edmonton.

Mio: We got to Minneapolis and the pilot came back. We all got off the plane to stretch our legs and refuel.

The pilot came back and said, "Edmonton it is, you guys. That's where you're going."

Once the plane took off, there were two moods in the cabin.

Gretzky was excited for the new opportunity on a new team, and potentially, new league.

Mio and Driscoll, two veterans who became part of the community in Indianapolis over two seasons, were upset they had to leave.

Gretzky: Peter and Eddie had a different sort of mindset at that point in time because they really cemented themselves in Indianapolis. They loved it there and were living together and enjoyed playing in Indy.

Mio: That was absolutely true. Because, remember, Peter and I were there for two years. We had a house that Wayne came and visited all the time because he was close to us.

You know how you build friendships and you're a big part of the team? We had been there for two years. We didn't know Indianapolis was going to fold.

Gretzky: I think they were really shell shocked when the deal transpired. I was really excited about getting the opportunity to go to Edmonton.

Mio: We were stunned. Wayne had only been there since August because he had to go to high school. Peter and I had already been spending summers there. We were part of the community, played softball and baseball games. We had a pretty good grasp on Indianapolis and the place.

Gretzky: So, the plane had two different mindsets: I was really excited and those guys didn't really get excited until they got to Edmonton because they were so disappointed in Leaving Indy, which is natural.

Mio: We got to Edmonton but it's not over yet because when we flew in, we got to the airport and the airport was dark. We were late. I think it was now around 10:00 o'clock Edmonton time. Maybe even later.

Finally, the plane pulled up to where the customs guy comes on and he said, "Hey, you're at the wrong airport. They're all waiting for you at the city airport."

So, we get back on the plane, we take off and we go to the city airport. Well, again the pilot looks back and says, "I'm going to need that credit card again."

I said, "For what! We're right here (laughing)!"

Eventually, Gretzky, Mio and Driscoll arrived with reporters waiting for them.

Matheson: I just remember waiting, waiting and waiting. It was a long night. As a newspaper guy, I was just worried about deadlines. Like, let's get this show on the road.

Mio: As soon as we landed in the city, (Oilers Public Relations Director) John Short, I think, came racing up. The pilot opened the door and John said, "Come on guys, they've all been waiting for you. You got to get in and get welcomed to Edmonton."

Matheson: I just remember us waiting at the downtown airport with a crush of people. It wasn't like we were waiting for Gordie Howe to come in. It was a 17-year-old kid and the buzz around the kid was that he was a Hall of Famer. As it turned out, he was the greatest player to ever live.

Mio: Wayne got out, Peter got out, they started walking and I waited.

He (Short) said, "What do you want, what are you doing?"

I said, "Here. I'm not leaving until you take care of this."

I gave him my receipt and he said, "No problem, here."

He gave the pilot their credit card and sure enough, ripped my copy up, which probably was the worst thing that we did because it would have been not knowing what Wayne was going to do in Edmonton. It would have been a nice keepsake to mount it up,

"He said, 'One day, we're going to merge with the NHL... One day you're going to be captain of this team and one day, we're going to win a Stanley Cup.'" give it to Wayne, put it in his place, his dad's place or trophy room.

Matheson: Then Gretzky finally arrived and he looked exactly like he did four or five months earlier: Long hair and skinny - not looking like he would set the world on fire but of course, he did.

Mio: So, we had the press conference and off Wayne goes with a billet family, while Peter and I went to a motel that was close to Northlands.

I remember saying to Peter, "Boy, I thought we were in the big leagues being sold to Edmonton. Look at the place they got us put up in (laughing)."

Gretzky went on to play nine seasons with the Orange & Blue in the National Hockey League, compiling 1669 points in 696 games, while also winning the Stanley Cup four times with the franchise. The Oilers Legend holds or shares 61 NHL records, including most goals, most points and most assists.

Gretzky: My dad always said to me, "Life happens for a reason."

It was meant to be that I was to go to Edmonton. It was meant to be that I started in Indy and had Peter, Eddie, and we ended up all together in Edmonton.

Mio: When something like that happens, it's hard to forget.

Gretzky: from Day 1 when I met Glen (Sather), the first meeting I had with him, he told me that - and I'll never forget this.

He said, "One day, we're going to merge with the NHL. We're going to be in the NHL, I think by next year. One day you're going to be captain of this team and one day, we're going to win a Stanley Cup."

I remember thinking, "Wow, we got a lot to do in the next few years (laughing)."

But it all did come true.

HOCKEY IS FOR EVERYONE™

BY JAMIE UMBACH

Zeyad Almahamed was laced up in a pair of hockey skates with a stick in hand for the first time during an Introduction To Hockey session at the Downtown Community Arena adjacent to Rogers Place on February 7.

The 13-year-old took part in the session, which was designed to introduce youth to the sport of hockey, alongside 30 more participants from the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers.

“We were playing, practicing, and doing some tricks,” Zeyad said of his first hockey experience after arriving in Canada in 2016. “At the end, we played a game versus each other. It felt so nice and so exciting.”

Fast forward to February 19, Hockey Is For Everyone Night at Rogers Place, and Zeyad was having his name called by the public announcer and lining up on the blueline alongside future heroes Leon Draisaitl, Ryan Nugent-Hopkins, and Oscar Klefbom.

“I felt scared, shy, and excited at the same time,” he admitted. “I want to play all my life now.”

Zeyad was a part of a diverse group of six participants called to the ice for the national anthems ahead of that night’s Oilers and Arizona Coyotes matchup, as part of Hockey Is For Everyone Night, a league-wide initiative that uses the game of hockey and the League’s global influence to foster more inclusive communities and drive social change.

Among those included in the ceremony were centre Spencer Tomc from the Edmonton Adaptive Sports Association Storm sledge hockey team, 23-year-old Briann Baldock from the Edmonton SeeHawks and the Alberta Sports and Recreation Association for the Blind, and other individuals representative of the diversity that makes up the hockey community.

A further 450 tickets to the game were also donated to a number of groups to give people who might not otherwise be able to attend a game, the opportunity to do so, some for even the very first time.

As they've also done in years past, Oilers players took to the ice for warmup with Pride Tape woven around their stick blades to show support for the LGBTQ community. The colourful tape created in Edmonton symbolizes inclusiveness in sport, with the sticks being auctioned off in the Edmonton Oilers Community Foundation online charity auction in support of the You Can Play Project, helping fight off homophobia in sport.

"If you can play, you can play," Kristopher Wells, creator of pride tape with Jeff McLean, said. "Your sexual orientation or your gender identity doesn't need to be your biggest barrier in life - it can be your greatest asset to achieve your hopes and dreams.

"Seeing a player step on the ice with their stick covered in pride tape sends that message of inclusion and hope to that young teenager out there who's maybe wondering if hockey can be their future."

HOCKEY IS FOR EVERYONE™

Supported by all 31 NHL teams, Hockey Is For Everyone extends far beyond the individual game night and is a year-round campaign set on opening doors for all players, coaches, athletes and fans who are passionate about hockey regardless of their race, religion, skin colour, gender, ability, sexual orientation or socio-economic status.

The Edmonton Oilers Community Foundation continued its commitment to embracing inclusivity as they hosted Inner City High School students for an annual luncheon at Rogers Place in February, and sponsored three sledge hockey teams from the Edmonton Adaptive Sports Association to attend and compete at the NHL Sled Classic in Chicago.

Oilers forward Juhar Khaira, once again serving as the team's ambassador for Hockey Is For Everyone this season, had the opportunity to visit with India's national women's hockey team this past November at the Scotiabank Saddledome in Calgary to help inspire the next generation of women's hockey.

“This is a dream of every player – to become NHL players. They got an opportunity to see how they do the exercises and the drills they’re doing... so it’s a big opportunity for the girls and we are very happy.”

ABDUL HAKIM, INDIA’S NATIONAL WOMEN’S TEAM HEAD COACH

“This is a dream of every player – to become NHL players,” India’s national women’s team head coach Abdul Hakim said. “They got an opportunity to see how they do the exercises and the drills they’re doing... so it’s a big opportunity for the girls and we are very happy.”

The team was visiting Calgary to participate in the Wickenheiser Female World Hockey Festival, dubbed WickFest for short, hosted by Canadian hockey legend Hayley Wickenheiser. The challenge of playing hockey in India begins with access to a proper ice surface.

“In India we had one international-standard ice hockey rink, but it was totally shut down because of the expenses,” Hakim said. “Here they get the opportunity to play on international-standard ice, so it’s amazing.”

Challenging the status quo is a continuous battle in the fight to prove that hockey really is for everyone.

“Breaking barriers, as we are doing, it’s really important for us to [play] at such a level,” forward Diskit Chhonzom Agmo said. “We never give up, no matter what the hurdles and barriers are, we always look forward to what’s in our hands.”

Hockey Is For Everyone is just a small piece of the larger puzzle of making the sport more accessible and inclusive for all communities, helping break down one barrier at a time. 📍

OIL KINGS PREPPING FOR PLAYOFFS AFTER REBOUND SEASON

BY ALYSCIA WARNER

WHAT A DIFFERENCE A YEAR CAN MAKE.

After a last-place finish in the WHL standings in 2017-18, the Edmonton Oil Kings have rebounded in 2018-19 with a complete 180-degree-type performance, exciting fans while they soared up the WHL standings.

The team has a return to the playoffs set square in its sights, not only managing to win many more games, but doing so while reaching a number of personal and team milestones along the way.

A total of eight Oil Kings registered arguably one of the most coveted milestones – at least ones that come early in a player’s career – their first career WHL goal.

Of course that achievement doesn’t hold quite the same weight for a goaltender, the positional equivalent being the shutout, which was achieved for the first time in his career this season by Dylan Myskiw.

Both Oil Kings guardians of the goal have shown they’re up to the task of being considered among the League’s best, as Myskiw and Todd Scott were named WHL Goaltender of the Week at different points this season.

Of course, true team success doesn’t happen without teamwork, and no one exemplifies that better than Oil Kings captain Trey Fix-Wolansky.

The Columbus Blue Jackets prospect has been among the best in the League in terms of point production all season long, but his numbers have also been good enough to rank him among the greatest in Oil Kings modern franchise history. Approaching the final month of the regular season, Fix-Wolansky was just two points back of tying the mark for most assists in a single season, set in 2012-13 by Dylan Wruck (63).

Known as a set-up man as opposed to a shoot-first kind of guy, the Edmonton native has also registered his share of snipes over the course of his three WHL seasons, moving his way into fifth in all-time regular season goals in modern franchise history, and continuing to climb.

But the offence hasn’t just come from the leadership group, as the Oil Kings have seen scoring come from all four forward lines and the blueline as well.

Conner McDonald has treated Oil Kings faithful to a torrid scoring pace fit for the record books, as he tied Cody Corbett’s mark from 2013-14 for most goals scored by a defenceman in a single regular season in February (17).

Those 17 goals (and counting) in 2018-19 have also contributed to his ever-growing career total which, as the calendar turned to March, saw him just four goals back (34) of the record for most goals scored by an Oil Kings defenceman in modern franchise history (38), set by Aaron Irving.

Finally, over-agers Quinn Benjafield and Vince Loschiavo each reached the 300 regular season games mark earlier in the campaign, but as memorable as the first 300 undoubtedly were, they – along with fellow over-ager Andrew Fyten and the rest of the team – hope their remaining games give them the greatest milestone memories of all as they strive for a lengthy playoff run. ♦
