STADIUM: STADE AUGUSTE-DELAUNE

The 12th most populous city in France with 183,042 inhabitants, Reims can pride itself on having played a pivotal part in French history. Its claims to fame include having been the venue for the baptism of Clovis and the crowning of numerous subsequent monarchs. This explains two of its nicknames: the City of Coronations and the City of Kings. Against this backdrop, its cathedral – Notre-Dame de Reims, built on the very same site where Clovis was baptized – is among the most renowned in France. It is the jewel in the crown of a city that is replete with historical, cultural and architectural treasures.

Besides its monuments, its museums and its Art Deco façades, Reims has another mouth-watering draw for visitors from across the globe: champagne. The world-famous drink originated nearby and was a strong contributor to the city's development and soaring profile following its invention by Dom Perignon in the 17th century. The bubbly beverage remains a major economic driving force for the city and surrounding region to this day.

As befitting the city where they are based, Stade Reims are one of the most hallowed outfits in French football. Founded in 1931, their heyday came during the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s. The two-time European Champion Clubs' Cup runners-up – they were beaten by Real Madrid in the final on both occasions, in 1956 and 1959 – dominated domestically during this period and captured the imagination thanks to their inventive, entertaining brand of attacking football and illustrious individuals including Raymond Kopa, Just Fontaine, Robert Jonquet and Roger Piantoni.

STADIUM: PARC DES PRINCES

How to sum up Paris in just a few sentences? Impossible. Countless books have been devoted to the French capital, and one could read every page from front to back without getting close to exhausting all the wonders of the fabled City of Lights. Located on the River Seine, and originally known as Lutetia, Paris has been an important settlement and cradle of civilization since ancient times.

The history of France itself is inscribed in each of the city's many monuments and richly diverse neighborhoods. From the Eiffel Tower to the Champs-Élysées, and from Montmartre to Menilmontant and the Latin Quarter, Paris is overflowing with historic treasures, cultural landmarks and architectural delights. With so many different museums and things to see and do, there is always something for everyone.

The ultimate symbol of French culture, and a global capital of fashion and luxury goods, Paris is one of the most popular tourist destinations in the world. Visitors making the trip for the Women's World Cup will be spoiled for choice as they look to fill their time between matches.

Paris can pride itself on having hosted games at two separate FIFA World Cups, in 1938 and 1998. Football first took root in the city in the early part of the 20th century, and various clubs have grown, prospered and sometimes faded away in the capital down the years. Paris Saint-Germain are the current local powerhouse, having been founded in 1970, and both the men's and women's teams have thrived since the club came under Qatari ownership at the start of the decade. While the men have racked up title after title at home and impressed in Europe, the women have also left their mark on the continental scene and are currently the only side capable of challenging Lyon for domestic honors.

LE HAVRE

STADIUM: STADE OCÉANE

While traces of a human presence in Le Havre date back to prehistoric times, the city itself is relatively young. First founded by King Francis I in October 1517, Le Havre flourished in the 18th and 19th centuries thanks to its port. Although the Second World War brought great devastation – the worst bombardments coming in 1944 – it quickly responded with enthusiasm and vigor. The city center was almost completely destroyed during the conflict, but architect Auguste Perret oversaw a total redesign between 1945 and 1964, and his efforts were rewarded in 2005 when Le Havre was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

Situated on the right bank of the Seine estuary in Normandy, 200 kilometers from Paris, Le Havre is France's second busiest port behind Marseille in terms of trade volume and the busiest for container traffic. Not surprisingly, those activities have lent the city a certain blue-collar, maritime identity, but it has also embraced the services sector and new industries in recent years.

Despite a bustling industrial estate, Le Havre is the least polluted commune in France according to one study and has received several ecological awards, including a Blue Flag for its beach. Its plentiful green spaces include the Forest of Montgeon, Rouelles Park, the gardens of the Priory of Graille and the Hanging Gardens, while the highlight of its rich cultural portfolio is the Museum of Modern Art André Malraux, also known as the MuMa.

Soccer has deep roots in Le Havre and continues to thrive in the city thanks in large part to Le Havre Athletic Club – the oldest surviving football and rugby club in France, having been founded in 1872. HAC may not possess a trophy cabinet to match their history, but their academy can pride itself on having produced a long list of internationals, including Lassana Diarra, Paul Pogba, Ibrahim Ba, Jean-Alain Boumsong, Vikash Dhorasoo and Steve Mandanda.

JILL ELLIS

U.S. WOMEN'S NATIONAL TEAM HEAD COACH

BIRTHDATE: SEPT. 6, 1966, IN FOLKESTONE, ENGLAND

HOMETOWN: MIAMI, FL

Jill Ellis was named the eighth head coach in U.S. Women's National Team history on May 16, 2014. Just a little under 13 months later, she led the USA to the championship of the 2015 FIFA Women's World Cup.

Ellis' 2015 Women's World Cup Team navigated the most difficult Women's World Cup tournament to date as 24 teams competed to play the seven matches it would take to win the competition, all on artificial turf. The team won six of those games, five by shutout, while tying Sweden in group play and allowed just three total goals. Ellis and her staff made several key tactical adjustments in the knockout rounds to help the U.S. make the Final, where it set numerous records in defeating Japan, 5-2, to win the USA's first World Cup title in 16 years.

At the end of 2015, along with a slew of other honors, Ellis was named the CONCACAF Female Coach of the Year and the FIFA World Coach of the Year for Women's Soccer, marking the first time an American had been bestowed with that honor. During 2015, the USA went 20-2-4 and also won the prestigious Algarve Cup in Portugal.

During her tenure and before the start of the World Cup, Ellis had called up 79 players to take part in at least one training camp. Of those 79 players, 56 have earned at least one cap and she has also given 28 players their first caps, 25 after the 2015 Women's World Cup.

Prior to the World Cup, Ellis had compiled a record of 95-7-18. She trails only Tony DiCicco (105) in all-time wins. The match against Australia on July 29, 2018 marked her 100th game on the bench for the USA, making her the fourth coach in U.S. history to coach in 100 or more games. She has moved past Pia Sundhage into third all-time in games coached with 120 and is well within reach of the two coaches ahead of her: DiCicco (121 games coached) and April Heinrichs (124).

Since taking over as head coach, Ellis has won seven tournaments: the 2015 Algarve Cup, the 2015 Women's World Cup, the 2016 CONCACAF Women's Olympic Qualifying Championship, the 2016 SheBelieves Cup, the 2018 SheBelieves Cup, the 2018 Tournament of Nations and the 2018 Concacaf Women's Championship. In 2019 prior to the World Cup, Ellis led the U.S. to a 7-1-2 record during the Countdown to the Cup, a 10-game series that took the USA to Europe in January and then across the country during the spring to prepare for the tournament in France.

Ellis guided the U.S. team through an unbeaten campaign in 2018 with an 18-0-2 record, marking only the fourth time in program history that the USA finished a calendar year without a defeat when it played 10 or more games. The USA went 5-0-2 against teams ranked in the top 10 in the world. The USA won the SheBelieves Cup, the Tournament of Nations and the Concacaf Women's Championship, rolling to a 5-0-0 record in the World Cup qualifying tournament while outscoring its opponents, 26-0. She earned her 75th career win on April 8 vs. Mexico.

Ellis led the USA to a 12-3-1 record in 2017 while playing the most challenging schedule in U.S. WNT history during a year after the World Cup/Olympic cycle, which was exactly how she had planned it. The USA hosted two elite international tournaments – the SheBelieves Cup and for the first time, the Tournament of Nations – while playing seven of the other top-nine teams in the world. The USA maintained its FIFA top ranking and lost just once in the final 13 games of the year while scoring 2.5 goals a game against stiff competition. In 2017, Ellis gave numerous players opportunities, as she saw 44 players in training camps, 30 players in game action and gave six players their first caps.

In 2016, Ellis led the USA to 22-0-3 record, marking just the third time the USA had gone unbeaten in regulation time in a year in which it had played 10 or more matches. The USA hosted the inaugural SheBelieves Cup in March, winning the tournament that featured four of the top teams in the world, in the USA, Germany, France and England. The USA earned 17 shutouts during the year and gave up more than one goal in a game just twice, but a penalty-kick loss to Sweden in the quarterfinal of the 2016 Olympics (a match in which the USA had a 27-6 shot margin) ended the USA's gold medal aspirations. She earned her 50th career win on July 22, 2016 in a 4-0 victory against Costa Rica.

Ellis took the position as U.S. Women's National Team head coach after serving as Development Director for the U.S. Women's National Teams since January of 2011.

The appointment of Ellis and April Heinrichs to the youth development positions in 2011 marked the first time U.S. Soccer had named full-time coaches to oversee the women's youth national team program and the programs' overall development.

Prior to becoming head coach of the U.S. WNT, Ellis twice served as interim head coach for the team. The first time was for a seven-game stint (5-0-2) in 2012 after Pia Sundhage left the program and before the hiring of Tom Sermanni, and then again in 2014 for two matches (1-0-1) after Sermanni was relieved of his duties and before she was officially named the head coach.

Prior to being named head coach, Ellis accrued extensive experience in the U.S. Women's National Team programs, having served as an assistant coach for the U.S. Women's National Team under Sundhage and helped the team to a gold medal at the 2008 Olympics. Ellis has served two stints as head coach of the U.S. Under-20 Women's National Team, guiding the squad to the CONCACAF title in 2010 and to the FIFA U-20 Women's World Cup in Germany.

She joined the full Women's National Team staff in January of 2008 after leaving her post with the U.S. U-20s, which she had led since the start of 2007.

Ellis has also had two stints as the head coach of the U.S. Under-21 Women's National Team, the second starting in the middle of 2005, after which she guided the team to the Nordic Cup in Sweden. She also coached the U-21s to the Nordic Cup title in Germany in 2000.

Ellis was also a scout for the USA at the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia and has served as an assistant coach with the U.S. U-21s and U.S. U-16 Girls' National Teams.

Ellis joined U.S. Soccer full-time after a highly successful 12-year run as the head women's soccer coach for the UCLA Bruins. Ellis led UCLA to eight NCAA Final Fours, including seven in a row from 2003-2009, and won six straight conference titles from 2003-2008. She finished her time in Westwood with a record of 229-45-14. Ellis, who was also head coach at the University of Illinois, has an all-time collegiate coaching record of 248-63-14.

She was the 2000 NSCAA National Coach of the Year after leading the Bruins to the NCAA Final in just her second season as head coach.

Ellis arrived in Westwood after heading the University of Illinois women's soccer program for two years. In 1998, she brought the Fighting Illini to a 12-8 record and a first-ever Big-Ten Tournament berth. Prior to coaching at Illinois, Ellis served as an assistant coach at the University of Virginia for one year (1996-97), at Maryland for three years (1994-96) and at North Carolina State for another three years (1988-90). As an assistant coach at North Carolina State, Ellis helped the Wolfpack secure the 1988 ACC title and an NCAA Final Four appearance.

A forward during her playing days at the College of William & Mary from 1984-87, Ellis was a Third-Team All-American in 1987. Ellis gave the graduation commencement speech at her alma mater in May of 2016. In 1984, Ellis helped Braddock Road in Virginia to the Under-19 club national championship.

Ellis grew up in Portsmouth, England and came to the United States in 1981 at the age of 15. She also lived in Singapore for two years while her father helped to develop a national soccer program in that country. She earned her B.A. in English Literature and Composition from the College of William & Mary in 1988 and currently resides in Miami with her wife Betsy and 13-year-old daughter Lily.

She has a USSF "A" coaching license and at the end of 2017, finished the U.S. Soccer Pro License Course during the second year it has been held. She was the only woman among the 17 coaches in the year-long course and earned another distinction in American soccer history as she became the first woman to complete the course.

U.S. WOMEN'S NATIONAL TEAM ASSISTANT COACH

BIRTHDATE: AUGUST 14, 1973, IN SUNDSVALL, SWEDEN

HOMETOWN: SUNDSVALL, SWEDEN

TONY GUSTAVSSON

Tony Gustavsson re-joined U.S. Soccer in June of 2014 to work as the top assistant coach with head coach Jill Ellis. Prior to this current position with the U.S. team, Gustavsson was an assistant coach with Pia Sundhage in 2012, helping the team to the Olympic gold medal in front of more than 80,000 fans at Wembley Stadium.

He was a vital part of Ellis' 2015 Women's World Cup Team staff, helping navigate the most difficult Women's World Cup tournament to date, as 24 teams competed to play the seven matches it would take to win the competition, all on artificial turf. The team won six of those games, five by shutout, while tying Sweden in group play and allowed just three total goals. The coaching staff made several key tactical adjustments in the knockout rounds to help the U.S. make the final, where it set numerous records in defeating Japan, 5-2, to win the USA's first World Cup title in 16 years.

Gustavsson returned to U.S. Soccer after a highly successful stint as head coach of Tyresö FF in the Damallsvenskan, Sweden's premier women's league. Tyresö was one of the world's top women's professional teams for several seasons and he led the Stockholm-based club to the league title in 2012.

With five U.S. Women's National Team players - Christen Press, Whitney Engen, Meghan Klingenberg, and earlier in the tournament, Ali Krieger and Ashlyn Harris - making major contributions to the 2013/2014 Champions League run, Gustavsson took Tyresö all the way to the 2014 Champions League Final in Lisbon, Portugal, where it fell to Wolfsburg of Germany, 4-3, in a dramatic end-to-end match.

Gustavsson has experience coaching in the top men's professional leagues in both Sweden and Norway as well. He was the head coach of Kongsvinger IL in Norway's Tippeligan in 2010 and coached Hammarby IF (where he coached former U.S. international Charlie Davies) in Sweden's Allsvenskan from 2007-2009. He took Hammarby to the brink of the Europa Cup group stage in 2007 but fell in a tight two-leg series to Braga of Portugal in the first round.

In 2004, he was a player-assistant coach for Degerfors and helped the club win the Second Division in Sweden. In 2005-2006, he became the head coach for the club.

He started his coaching career in 2000 as a player-head coach for Ytterhogdals IK, holding that position for four years, while winning the league in the first year.

Gustavsson spent one semester attending college in the USA at the University of Central Florida in 1994 before finishing his education at Lärarhögskolan in Stockholm from 1995-1999, where he got a teacher's degree in physical education and math. He also received a degree in soccer coaching from the University of Örebro in a two-year program from 2004-2005. He was one of the first coaches in Sweden to receive this degree. While in Florida and prior to attending UCF, he played briefly for the Orlando Lions in the USISL.

Gustavsson also holds a UEFA Pro coaching license.

He has worked as a soccer color commentator for Canal+, one of Sweden's biggest sports networks, and worked matches of the 2010 World Cup in South Africa for Sweden's SVT. He has also done commentary on Sweden National Team matches, Swedish First Division games and La Liga games from Spain.

Gustavsson and Annika have two children, a son Anton, age 17, and a daughter Alva, age 15. When not with the U.S. team, he resides in Stockholm, Sweden.

Swanson was a part of the 2015 Women's World Cup Team coaching staff that navigated the most difficult Women's World Cup tournament to date, as 24 teams competed to play the seven matches it would take to win the competition, all on artificial turf. The team won six of those games, five by shutout, while tying Sweden in group play and allowed just three total goals. The coaching staff made several key tactical adjustments in the knockout rounds to help the U.S. make the final, where it set numerous records in defeating Japan, 5-2, to win the USA's first World Cup title in 16 years.

He did an equally impressive job at Stanford, helping maintain the program's standing as one of the premier teams in the country while leading the Cardinal to two Pac-10 titles in four seasons. In 2004, he led Virginia to the first ACC Championship in school history, making him the only coach in Division I history to win titles in three different conferences.

During his four seasons at Stanford, Swanson guided the Cardinal to an overall record of 48-27-4, two Pac-10 championships and three NCAA Tournament appearances. In 1999, he was honored as the Pac-10 Coach of the Year.

Prior to serving as Stanford's head coach, Swanson served as both the head women's soccer coach and assistant director of athletics at Dartmouth College from 1990-1995. During his years at Dartmouth, he transformed the Big Green into a national contender with an overall record of 55-35-7 (.603). Under his guidance, Dartmouth made its first two NCAA Tournament appearances in school history (1993, 1994) and won its first two Ivy League Championships in school history (1991, 1993). During his last three years at the helm, the Big Green was ranked in the year-end top 20.

Swanson has coached 31 All-Americans, one national player of the year, 10 conference players of the year, and 91 all-conference selections. Of his former players at Dartmouth, Stanford and Virginia, 32 have played professionally in the WUSA, WPS or NWSL. In 2002, Swanson became the third coach to win at least 40 games with three different NCAA Division I women's soccer programs.

A graduate of Michigan State in 1984, Swanson played professionally in the United States and Canada for four years before returning to school to obtain his master's degree at Iowa. He played more than 150 consecutive games in stints with the Milwaukee Wave and the Chicago Shoccers of the American Indoor Soccer Association and with AC Roma and the Windsor Wheels in the National Soccer League of Canada (NSLC). U.S. WNT HIGH PERFORMANCE COACH

BIRTHDATE: JUNE 19, 1972, IN NEWCASTLE, ENGLAND

HOMETOWN: NEWCASTLE, ENGLAND

Dawn Scott first worked with the U.S. Women's National Team in January of 2010 and joined Pia Sundhage's staff full-time the following February. She is widely regarded as one of the foremost fitness and sports science coaches in women's international soccer and has been a part of the U.S. staff for the past two Women's World Cups and two Olympic tournaments. She will oversee the High Performance for the WNT in the run-up to and through the 2019 FIFA Women's World Cup.

Scott came to U.S. Soccer from the English Football Association, where she had worked since 2001 as Head of Exercise Science (women's teams), primarily working with the England Women's National Soccer Teams. Her responsibilities with the U.S. Women include the delivery, coordination and monitoring of the team's strength and conditioning, as well as the nutritional, recovery and exercise science strategies for the squad.

Scott also oversees the coordination and integration of sport science with all the NWSL clubs to monitor and develop the physical performance of the National Team players. In addition, Scott has a role in collaborating with Ellie Maybury, the High Performance Coach for the U.S. Youth Women's and Girls' National Teams, in overseeing the sport science strategies for those age group teams.

Scott was a vital part of Ellis' 2015 Women's World Cup Team staff, as she prepared the team physically to navigate the most difficult Women's World Cup tournament to date with 24 teams competing to play the seven matches it would take to win the competition, all on artificial turf. The U.S. team got stronger with each match, winning six of those games, five by shutout, while tying Sweden in group play and allowing just three total goals.

Scott has been a key lecturer on a variety of FA courses, including The FA Fitness Trainers Award, UEFA "A" License, International License, Youth Coaches, Pro License, Diploma courses, as well as having run courses on behalf of CONCACAF in Trinidad and Tobago, and for FIFA in Jamaica. She has also delivered some of the physical elements of the USSF coaching licenses. Scott was also commissioned by FIFA to produce the Physical Analysis report on the 2015 FIFA Women's World Cup, a role she will repeat following the completion of the 2019 FIFA Women's World Cup in France this summer.

Scott worked with the Great Britain women's soccer team at the World University Games in Bangkok in 2007, then joined the England senior women for their FIFA 2007 World Cup Finals campaign, where they reached the quarterfinals. Scott was also in New Zealand in 2008 with the England team competing in the inaugural FIFA U-17 Women's World Cup, where they reached the semifinals. She has worked with England women's teams in two Under-19 European Championship tournaments and one U-19 Women's World Cup (2002 in Canada), as well as two European Women's Championships with the senior side.

Scott also provided Sport Science support to the GB women's soccer team during the 2009 World University games in Belgrade, where the team won a bronze medal, and was also on the staff of the England Women's National Team that advanced to the final of the 2009 European Women's Championships held in Finland.

Scott has worked several major events with men's soccer teams, providing support for the World Futsal Championships in Malaysia and the Men's British University Games in Scotland, both in 2008.

From 1997-2001, Scott served as a lecturer of sports science at Worcester University, where she was program leader for many modules, including training for sport, match analysis and nutrition for sport performance.

In 1996, Scott earned her BSc (Hons) in Sport and Exercise Science from Manchester Metropolitan University. She went on to earn a Master's in Sports Nutrition from the University of Aberdeen in Scotland in 1997.

She has co-authored numerous research papers, as well as co-authoring a book chapter on sports science as it relates to elite female athletes, especially soccer players. Scott is currently studying part-time for a PhD through the University of Western Sydney, working closely with her supervisor Dr. Ric Lovell developing a training model for elite female soccer players through the use of GPS, heart rate and subjective wellness data, aimed at optimizing the physical performance of elite female soccer players. In 2018, she had her first scientific article as the primary author published, titled "Individualization of Speed Thresholds Does Not Enhance the Dose-Response Determination in Football Training."

Scott, along with two colleagues in her research group, recently validated speed thresholds specific to women's soccer (Velocity Zone Classifications in Elite Women's Football: Where Do We Draw the Lines; Park et al, 2018), utilizing longitudinal WNT data and using a novel data mining technique. FIFA have subsequently adopted those thresholds for some of the analysis it is conducting. Scott is currently working on further papers in order to better inform practitioners working in women's soccer with regard to the physical demands and loads players complete during competitive game play.

USA IN THE FIFA WOMEN'S WORLD CUP

As FIFA stages the eighth Women's World Cup, the U.S. Women's National Team is once again widely regarded as the most successful women's soccer team in history, with three FIFA Women's World Cup titles, one second-place finish and three third-place finishes. This year, the team will set its sights on capturing a fourth title in France.

In its seven Women's World Cup competitions, the U.S. is 33-4-6 in 43 total games and is the only nation to finish in the top three in each Women's World Cup (as well as the first four Olympics to feature women's soccer).

In 2015, a tough group stage saw the U.S. tie former coach Pia Sundhage and Sweden before prevailing in a nail-biter against Nigeria. The WNT then turned on the jets, storming to the 2015 FIFA World Cup title. Powered by captain Carli Lloyd's six knockout-round goals, including three in the thrilling title rematch with Japan, the USA dashed past up-and-coming Colombia 2-0 before beating old foe China in the quarterfinal. A showdown with Germany loomed in the semifinal, but a penalty kick miss by Germany and subsequent make by Lloyd set the U.S. on the path to the final, and substitute Kelley O'Hara's late goal, courtesy of a Lloyd assist, cemented the WNT's passage.

The epic final of the 2015 World Cup featured a record-making performance from Lloyd that catapulted her to her first FIFA Women's World Player of the Year award. With a hat trick that featured a goal from inside her own half, Lloyd put the game away by the half-hour mark, as Lauren Holiday and Tobin Heath also notched goals in the 5-2 win vs. Japan that saw the USA become the first nation to win three World Cups.

The USA hit some bumps in the road on the way to the 2011 FIFA Women's World Cup, falling in the semifinal of the CONCACAF Women's World Cup Qualifying Tournament at the end of 2010 before defeating Italy in a two-game playoff to earn the final berth to Germany. The Americans also lost two games during its World Cup preparation but still headed into the tournament as one of the favorites. What transpired in Germany will forever be remembered as a breakthrough event for women's soccer as the U.S. team's dramatic run to the World Cup Final inspired a nation.

The USA opened the 2011 tournament with a hard-fought 2-0 win against Korea DPR in Dresden on second-half goals from Lauren Cheney and improbably, defender Rachel Buehler. That set the stage for a 3-0 demolition of Colombia that featured the entire team saluting the crowd after the opening goal by Heather O'Reilly in recognition of the large group of U.S. military and their families that helped sell out the stadium in Sinsheim. The USA fell 2-1 to Sweden in its final group match in Wolfsburg, which sent them into a quarterfinal against Brazil back in Dresden. The drama and controversy-filled game featured the latest goal in Women's World Cup history: Abby Wambach's legendary header that sent the U.S. to a penalty kick shootout where it prevailed to reach the semifinal.

In the semifinal in Mönchengladbach, the USA ran into an extremely talented France team that dominated the match for stretches, but as the Americans often do at the highest levels, they found a way to win on a first-half goal from Cheney, another Wambach header and a late clincher from Alex Morgan. The USA was by far the stronger team in the World Cup Final in Frankfurt but let two leads slip away and fell in a penalty kick shootout to Japan.

Abby Wambach scored in the final four games – the first U.S. player to achieve such a feat in a World Cup tournament – and took over the U.S. career lead in Women's World Cup goals from Michelle Akers with her 13th in the championship game. Wambach and Morgan became the first U.S. players to score in the semifinal and final of a World Cup.

In 2007, the USA was riding a long unbeaten streak and held the world's top ranking heading into the FIFA Women's World Cup in China, where they won perhaps the most difficult first-round group in the history of the tournament. In Group B, the USA drew with Korea DPR 2-2 in the opening match and then got two goals from Abby Wambach in a must-win 2-0 victory over Sweden. With advancement to the quarterfinals still up in the air, the USA won the group with a hard-fought 1-0 victory over a vastly improved Nigeria. The American women then met up-and-coming England in the quarterfinal, and after an evenly played first 20 minutes, put together its best performance of the tournament, winning 3-0 and earning a place in the semifinals against Brazil. The semifinal marked a low point in U.S. history, as the team suffered some heart-wrenching misfortune while scoring an own goal and seeing Shannon Boxx harshly sent off at the end of the first half. That combination of factors led to a 4-0 loss, the worst in U.S. history, and a spot in the third-place match. The USA rebounded wonderfully to win the bronze medal, rolling over Norway with a 4-1 score to end the tournament on a high note.

Considered the top team in the world heading into the FIFA Women's World Cup USA 2003, the defending champion U.S. was assured the title of tournament favorite after the competition was moved from China to the U.S. due to the outbreak of SARS. After rolling through group play with a 3-0 record and an 11-1 advantage in goal differential, the U.S. squeezed past rival Norway by a 1-0 margin in the quarterfinals. Then in Portland, Ore. - the only city in history to host a World Cup match in consecutive competitions - the U.S. was shocked by Germany, who scored two injury-time goals in a 3-0 victory en route to winning it all and being crowned world champion. The U.S. was relegated to the third-place game. There, the Red, White and Blue made quick work of northern neighbor Canada 3-1, the same team that forced the U.S. to sudden-death overtime in the CONCACAF Women's Gold Cup final less than a year earlier.

The United States Women's National Team added to its prestige by becoming the first squad to host and win a Women's World Cup when it downed China PR 5-4 in penalty kicks after battling to a 0-0 draw through regulation and overtime in the 1999 final. The match was played in front of a women's athletics record crowd of 90,185 on June 10, 1999 at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif. The winning penalty kick goal for the U.S. has become a pop culture moment in American history, with Brandi Chastain connecting on the shot and then celebrating the goal with a nation. The championship marked the USA's third major championship of the decade, including the 1991 Women's World Cup crown and the 1996 Olympic title.

The biggest disappointment for the U.S. Women in the 1990s came at the 1995 Women's World Cup in Sweden when the team fell to arch-rival Norway in the tournament semifinals, 1-0. The defeat was the first ever for the USA in WWC play and helped Norway into the final where they downed Germany to take the crown.

In 1991, the U.S. won the inaugural FIFA Women's World Cup in China. The championship was the first for the USA in a FIFA competition and established the dominance that the U.S. women have continued to display at the international level. The United States was led by Michelle Akers, Carin Jennings and April Heinrichs, dubbed "the triple-edged sword." The trio combined to score 20 of the team's 25 goals in China, including all five (Jennings 3, Heinrichs 2) in a 5-2 semifinal victory over Germany and both goals (Akers) in a 2-0 win over Norway to win the title.
