PREVIEW OF TODAY'S MATCH

The Kansas City Wizards (4-5-5, 17 points) will host D.C. United (6-6-1, 19 points) in a 4th of July match up at Arrowhead Stadium. The Wizards will look to continue their success at home. In seven home games, the Wizards have posted a 4-1-2 and are unbeaten in their last four home games.

In their seven MLS games at Arrowhead this season, the Wizards have outscored their opponents 13-8. They have recorded multi-goal games in five of the seven home games including the last four consecutive games.

Kansas City will welcome the return of goalkeeper Tony Meola, who will play his first match at Arrowhead since returning from the 2002 FIFA World Cup with the U.S. National Team. Meola was in net for the Wizards at San Jose last weekend in his return to MLS action, but took the loss as San Jose scored twice in the closing five minutes of the match.

D.C. United comes to Kansas City with the worst road record in the league, going 0-5-0 away from RFK Stadium. They have managed just two goals on the road, while giving up nine goals in five games. D.C. is led by goalkeeper, and reigning MLS Player of the Week, Nick Rimando. Rimando has now posted two consecutive shutouts, including last weekends 1-0 overtime win over Los Angeles.

D.C. UNITED NOTES

- * D.C. United owns a league-worst 0-5-0 record on the road this season.
- * D.C. is 1-4-0 all-time on the 4th of July, picking up their only win in a 3-2 decision over Dallas 1997.
- * United will be without defender Ryan Nelson who is currently with the New Zealand National Team in the Oceania Nationa Cup.
- * Goalkeeper Nick Rimando was named the MLS Player of the Week last week after posting a shutout against Los Angeles.
